FIRE DISTRICT MEETING. COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN, ss. To the qualified voters of Fire District No. 1 in Palmer:

You are hereby notified to meet at the Eastern Hampden District Court Room in said Palmer on Tuesday the twelfth day of April next at two o'clock in the afternoon, to act on the following articles, viz:—

ARTICLE 1. To choose a Moderator to preside at said meeting.

ART. 2. To choose a Clerk, Treasurer, Prudential Committee and Board of Engineers and all other officers that may be necessary for the ensuing year.

ART. 3. To hear the report of the Treasurer, Prudential Committee and Board of Engineers and to act on the same.

ART. 4. To see if the Fire District will vote to pay the members of Palmer Steamer Co. No. 1 and Hook and Ladder Co. No. 1 for their services for the ensuing year.

ART. 5. To see if the Fire District will vote to put in a suitable fire alarm and raise money for the same.

ART. 6. To see what action the Fire District will take toward lighting the streets, and raise money for the same.

ART. 7. To raise such sums of money as may be necessary to pay the expenses of the Fire Department and annual rental of the Palmer Water Company for the ensuing year and appropriate the same, and to transact any other business that properly comes before said meeting.

Given under my hand this twenty-ninth day of March, 1887. WILLIAM W. LEACH, Clerk of the Fire District.

Best Corn I ever raised, says W. O. S. Hodgdon, of Tuftonboro, N. H., speaking of the use of our fertilizer. BOWKER FERTILIZER CO., Boston and New York.

On the Same Track.

As I strolled on the beach with fair Isabella—
We were friends of long standing, I'd known her a week—
Was it love or the shade of her gorgeous umbrella
That fluttered across her soft cheek?

Hope tugged at my heart-strings and made me audacious,
For when coquetry blooms like a provencal rose,
It is surely a sign that she means to be gracious,
And bless with sweet favor some one of her beaux.

So I set me to wooing, both blithely and bravely,
Caught in mine a small hand in a brown gant de suede,
Snatched a kiss from her lips, and was begging her suavely
To leave out my heart from the list of betrayed,

When she stopped me. "I'm sorry," she murmured, discreetly,
"But you see—I'm engaged!" and pretended to sigh,
While a swift recollection upset me completely—
"Great Heavens!" I gasped, "I forgot. So am I."

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

Young men who start out to study German generally stop at "Zwei beers."—Rochester Post Express.

This is about the begining of the season when nature thinks most about the clothes of the season.—Yonkers Gazette.

It is hardly fair to tell a bow-legged man that he is so stupid that you cannot see through him.—Philadelphia Herald.

A person with a cork leg, corkscrew eyes, blue-bottled nose and jug-handled ears must be full of spirits—Whitehall Times.

There is a man in Wellington so short that when he is ill he cannot tell whether he has the toothache or corns.—Winfield Tribune.

Showing a man where he can invest his money is not showing him how he can ever see it again after investment.—New Orleans Picayune.

The man who continually prates about how he is "attached" to his wife will frequently be found tied to her apron strings.—Lowell Citizen.

He—"Dearest, if I had known this tunnel was so long, I'd have given you a jolly hug."

She—"Didn't you? Why, somebody did."—Life.

"It is too big for dog's muzzle," said the blind man, who had been given a bustle to see if he could tell what it was. "It must be to keep an elephant from biting."—Philadelphia Herald.

Another one of George Washington's nurses died last week. This is the one who turned the grindstone for George when he was preparing for the immortal cherry-tree act.—Merry War.

A Natural Request. Partington is introducing his English cousin to some American oysters. English Cousin (imploringly)—"You carve, deah boy; you're more use to it than I am."—Tid Bits.

A female tobogganer, or rather a tobogganienne, who did a good deal of coasting last winter, says that the best arms for coast defence are a pair of nice young man's.—Washington Hatchet.

The Marquis of Almonzova, once a miner working at 30 cents a day, now has an income of $456 per hour. He has little regard for the proposition that eight hours should constitute a day's work.—Boston Transcript.

Even if a traveler reaches the end of a railroad journey with a whole skin, he may be burned alive at the hotel he puts up at. The only safe way seems to be to sit down in the middle of a twenty-acre lot.—Detroit Free Press.

New York lady (to Mr. Breezy of Chicago)—"Would you care to visit any of the galleries while in the city, Mr. Breezy?"

Mr. Breezy—"Why, yes; there is nothing I should like better. What are the prices—three shots for ten cents?"—Puck.

Visitor (to convict in penitentiary)—"Are you undergoing punishment for your first offense?"

Convict (not without pride)—"No, sir; I've been up sever'l times afore."

Visitor—"Ah, then your career must have been a very checkered one?"

Convict—"No, my career has been a very striped one."—Sun.

"My dear," said a K street father to his daughter, "who is the gentleman who has been so attentive to you of late?"

"Oh, papa, he is such a nice gentleman, and he gets $8000 a year!"

"Great Scott, child, he must be a cabinet minister!"

"Oh, no, he isn't, papa, he is the pitcher in a base ball nine."—Washington Critic.

"I say George," said a St. Paul drummer to a Minneapolis brother, as they came together in a Dakota hotel, "have you heard of the big row they are having in your city just now?" "Row! No. What is the difficulty?" "They have taken all the Bibles out of the schools there." "The Bibles out of the schools! What for, pray?" "Why, because it mentions St. Paul many times, but Minneapolis not once."—Chicago Commercial Traveler.

Pleasure-seeker en route to Montreal—"Look here, my friend, four dollars is a little steep."

Coachman—"You ain't payin' out of your own money, are you?"

Chicago Man—"Yes, sir, I've brought suit against him for $500 for defamination of character." "Isn't that very little?" "Not as characters run in Chicago."

POVERTY AND DISTRESS.

That poverty which produces the greatest distress is not of the purse but of the blood. Deprived of its richness it becomes scant and watery, a condition termed anemia in medical writings. Given this condition, and scrofulous swellings and sores, general and nervous debility, loss of flesh and appetite, weak lungs, sore throat, spitting of blood and consumption, are among the common results. If you are a sufferer from thin, poor blood employ Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" which enriches the blood and cures these grave affections. Is more nutritive than cod liver oil, and is harmless in any condition of the system, yet powerful to cure. By druggists.

Read the testimony of a prominent citizens of Pawtucket, R. I., under date of January 16, 1885. "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. Seth Arnold's Cough Killer for coughs and colds. I had not much faith in it at first, but a few doses cured me of a cold and tickling in the throat. It is a wonderful remedy."—G. L. walker. For sale at all druggists. Price 25c., 50c. and $1 per bottle.

Dr. Seth Arnold's Sugar Coated Bilious Pills unequalled for costiveness, jaundice, liver troubles. 25 cents.

GREAT NEWS FOR THE BALDHEADS.

About three miles from Princeton, Ky., on the Wilson Warehouse road, in a bend of the Stevens creek, is a low, marshy flat about an acre in size. The earth is of a greenish color, and no weed or grass of any kind was ever known to grow in it, and during the dryest season is always wet. Old Uncle Peter Black, a native of the Donaldson district, came to town last August (election day), and according to the habit with jovial friends, drank too much. Late that evening he saddled his old gray mule and attempted to wend his way home. When the rider and the old mule came to the creek, either by the obstinacy of the mule or by some mystic hand, the old animal went into the marsh and spilt Uncle Pete. The soft, damp earth proved a healing balm to the bald, aching head of the old man, and the excitement of the day was soon forgotten in a dreamless sleep, from which he was awakened the next morning by the heat of the sun to find half of his head and left side covered with mud. About two weeks after the accident Uncle Pete found that all that part of his body that had been covered with mud was covered with a fine growth of young hair.

St. Valentine's day he came to town and showed to a number of our most prominent men a luxuriant growth of hair three and one-half inches in length, covering his left side and half of his head. At first his story was laughed at; but since a bald head is a source of great annoyance to the owner, a few that were sensitive on the loss of hair began to view it in a different light. For the past two weeks about twenty are wearing skull caps with this muck. Yesterday several took off their caps, and to their great joy and happiness their heads were covered with a fine growth of young hair, but unfortunately it was red as a beet.

The owner of the marsh has had it enclosed by a high plank fence, and sells the muck at $2 a pound, and the demand is becoming so great that he can scarcely fill all the orders.—Louisville Commercial.

AS SPOKEN BY BOYS.

If people were to write our language as carelessly as many speak it the result would be something strange. The clipping of familiar words, and particularly the huddling of as many together in a bunch as we can find breath to speak, make a curious language, as this will show. Specimens of boys' conversation like the following may be called short hand talking:

"Warejegolastnight?"
"Hadder skate."
"Jerfind the ice hard'ngood?"
"Yes, hard'nouga."
"Jer goerlone?"
"No; Bill'n Joe wenterlong."
"Howlate jerstay?"
"Pastate."
"Lemmeknow wen yergoin', woncher. I wanter go'nshowyer howto skate."
"H—m! Ficoodnt skate better'n you, I'd sell out'n quit!"
"Well, we'll tryerace 'nseefyercan."—Youth's Companion.

CHURCH MOORINGS.

An old sea-captain was riding in the cars, and a young man sat down by his side. He said: "Young man, where are you going?" "I am going to Philadelphia to live." "Have you any letters of introduction?" "Yes," said the young man, and he pulled some of them out. "Well," said the old sea-captain, "have you a church certificate?" "O yes," said the young man; "I did not suppose you desired to look at that." "Yes," said the sea-captain, "I want to look at that. As soon as you reach Philadelphia present that to some Christian church. I am an old sailor, and I have been up and down in the world, and it is my rule, as soon as I get into port, to fasten my ship fore and aft to the wharf, although it may cost a little wharfage, rather than have my ship out in the stream, floating hither and thither with the tide."—Leaves of Light.

Give $5 to the theater twice or three times a week, and then throw 50 cents in to support your pastor on Sunday. Expend as much more on the circus and pleasure excursions, and then get angry and say your pastor will ruin the church by so many collections. Go to church on Sunday with over $1000 to bedeck your person with useless ornaments, and sing, "Waft, ye Winds, His Story," and then put in an old slick quarter to convert the world to sin.—Arkansas Methodist.

There are in New York over 10,000 persons who make a living at the rag business. Every morning before sunrise more than 2000 Italians are out fishing in ash barrels with iron hooks. These chiffonnieres get from a quarter of a cent to half a cent a pound for the rags and paper they fish out of the barrels. Old iron, twine, and unburned coal swell their revenue. They make in good days 50 cents.—Evening Sun.

If you should ask me what was the most expensive crop to put in the ground I would refer you to cauliflowers. Our firm has at the present time locked up in the vaults of the Mercantile Deposit company 400 pounds of snowball cauliflower seeds worth $80 a pound. This seed is worth its weight in gold and is valuable because it is so very hard to get—N. Y. Seedsman.

Sympathetic clergyman to widowed parishoner—"Was poor brother Saltonstall prepared to go?" Consoled widow—"Yes, indeed. He was insured in half a dozen companies."

Old Jones is Dead.

I sat in my window, high overhead,
And heard them say, below in the street—
"I suppose you know that old Jones is dead?"
Then the speakers passed, and I heard their feet
Heedlessly walking their onward way.
"Dead!" what more could there be to say?

But I sat and pondered what it might mean
Thus to be dead while the world went by;
Did Jones see farther than we have seen?
Was he one with the stars in the watching sky?
Or, down there under the growing grass,
Did he hear the feet of the daylight pass?

Were day time and night time as one to him now,
And grieving and hoping a tale that is told?
A kiss on his lips or a hand on his brow,
Could he feel them under the churchyard mould
As he surely had felt them his whole life long,
Though they passed with his youth time, hot and strong?

They called him "Old Jones" when at last he died;
"Old Jones" he had been for many a year;
Yet his faithful memory Time defied,
And dwelt in the days so distant and dear,
When first he had found that love was sweet,
And recked not the speed of its hurrying feet.

Does he brood in the long night under the sod
On the joys and sorrows he used to know?
Or, far in some wonderful world of God
Where the shining seraphs stand, row on row,
Does he wake like a child at the daylights gleam,
And know that the past wast a night's short dream?

Is he dead, and a clod down there below,
Or dead and wiser than any behind?
Which? Ah! who of us may know,
Or who can say how the dead folk thrive?
But the summer morning is cool and sweet.
And I hear the live folk laugh in the street.

—Louise Chandler Moulton.

HOW THEY LOST A PASTOR.

The First church of Brandon were seeking a pastor, an occupation that had engrossed their energies for some time past. For it was fully seven months since the council had assembled to formally dismiss Mr. Barnes, and had declared the pulpit vacant.

Mr. Barnes had labored faithfully in their service five long years. During all this time he had preached good, if not brilliant sermons; attended regularly at the prayer meeting, and made all the pastoral calls that one mortal man, without a horse and buggy, could reasonably be expected to make. And yet his congregation were not satisfied. Intimations finally reached the ears of the good man that his resignation would be resignedly accepted. He sent it in, and the paper, the next day, announced the grief of the First church at the resignation of their beloved pastor, Mr. Barnes, whose wife's health forced him to seek a more salubrious climate.

Whereupon it devolved upon the orphaned congregation to choose for themselves a pastor,—a man after their own hearts; one who should possess all the virtues of their late pastor, as well as those which he lacked.

They proceeded to search for him in the truly orthodox way; namely, by entertaining candidates. Sabbath after Sabbath beheld a different divine in the pulpit. They came, we know not whence, and returned, we know not whither. They embraced every known type of man, from the venerable D. D. of three score and ten, to the immature theological student of twenty-one summers.

The doctrine preached to that people during the season of candidating was as variegated as the patchwork silk quilt which they presented to their late pastor's wife on her birthday. It shaded all the way from Catholicism to Universalism, and branched out into every other known "ism." There was the "old school" and the "new school," old-fashioned orthodoxy, and modern free thought. There were sermons with strong leanings toward liberalism, and there were others fraught with Calvinism, and oozing orthodoxy at every pore. And there were scientific sermons without end, and poetical and philosophical ones. But in all this variety the people found not the man they sought. There was some insurmountable objection to every candidate.

The Rev. Abercombie gave them good sermons, but the college students declared that his gestures were "execrable," and would demoralize their own "style;" and they came en masse to the church meeting and voted him down.

The Rev. J. Irwin Smith was youthful and handsome, and the young ladies shed tears of regret when the church decided not to call him. But Deacon Grimes said his sermons were mere "froth," and he hoped they wouldn't, in his day, get down to a man who parted his hair in the middle.

Rev. Loring was too dramatic, and he threatened to convert the staid old church into a theater, while good Mr. Blakesley, who despised show, was rejected because he didn't "draw." One candidate was too solemn, another too frivolous; one was too reserved, another too "common."

And so the spring and summer came, and faded away, and fall was fast merging into winter; and the people were growing weary of their search and longed for a settled pastor, but he still eluded them. As old Mr. Grove aptly summed up the situation: "We've had close to a hundred men here to preach for us, and we've given 'em all a fair show, and there hain't been a perfect man among 'em."

At length, when expectation was wellnigh exhausted, a cheering ray penetrated the gloom of their despondency, and in their mind's eye they could see as their own established pastor the brilliant young preacher who was holding audiences spellbound in a western city. A delegation was dispatched to treat with him. He had graciously consented to consider the matter, and the whole situation was as encouraging as it well could be. He was to preach for them on trial the first Sunday in December; and on the Saturday evening previous, Deacon Gilkey and his wife were returning from a day's shopping in Chicago. Just as the cars were starting, Mr. Ames, another pillar in the church hurried in, and seeing Mr. and Mrs. Gilkey, dropped into the seat behind them, the other half of which was occupied by a strange gentleman in a fur-trimmed overcoat and a seal-skin cap.

"Getting chilly," remarked Mr. Ames to Mr. Gilkey, as an introduction to conversation, meanwhile buttoning up his overcoat. The remark recalled the fact to Mr. Gilkey, and he buttoned up his coat and replied:

"Yes; looks a little like a storm."

"Shouldn't wonder," said Mr. Ames. "They've had five inches of snow up north."

"Is that so? They have pretty tough winters up there." And Mr. Gilkey gave his coat collar another jerk.

"Suppose you'll be out to church to-morrow?" said Mr. Ames.

"Yes, I presume so," assented Mr. Gilkey, and Mrs. Gilkey said: "Yes, certainly," with a glance at a bandbox at her feet, which suggested the idea that a Chicago milliner had made "assurance doubly sure" in her case. But it of course suggested no such thought to Mr. Ames, who observed:

"I guess people will turn out pretty generally to hear our new man."

"They ought to," said Mr. Gilkey, "for he seems to be our last chance, and I say we'd better take him if he suits any kind of way."

"We might as well shut up the church if we don't get some one before long," said Mr. Ames, gloomily. "There wasn't a baker's dozen out last Sunday, and the Halls and McAllisters have given up their pews. Hall says he won't pay pew rent for the sort of preaching we have had there lately."

"It needn't make any difference to him what kind of preaching we have, for he's never there," remarked Mrs. Gilkey, severely.

"What did Dr. Williams have to say about this Mr. Grant that's going to preach to-morrow?" inquired Mr. Gilkey.

"He won't take any stand at all," said Mr. Ames; "says its none of his funeral who they get. He's put out because they would not call that Mr. Otgin; but we never could have made that thing work."

"He preached good sermons," said Mr. Gilkey, reflectively.

"He talked through his nose," said Mrs. Gilkey, conclusively.

"Then the Whites," said Mr. Ames. "They want that eastern man with the long hair. He's a sort of a cousin to White's wife. The West End are all united on that man from Washington. And Dr. Glover's got a man down south that he's trying to run in for this long time." Mr. Ames paused for breath, and Mrs. Gilkey took up the burden of his complaint:

"Yes," she said, "and the Georges say they won't vote for anybody but that Mr. Paine from Ohio. He stayed with them while he was here, and they say he is just as agreeable and entertaining as can be. You'd never suspect he was a minister."

At this stage, Mr. Ames, happening to look up suddenly, noticed an amused smile on the face of the stranger who shared his seat.

"I beg your pardon," said that gentleman in answer to Mr. Ames's stare, "But I could not help overhearing your conversation."

"No harm done," returned Mr. Ames, affably. "We're pretty much interested in getting the right sort of man for our church. We know who keeps things going, you see." He rattled, insignificantly, some coins in his pocket, and the stranger intimated that he saw.

"Isn't it the general opinion that we're paying too steep a price for our preaching?" inquired Mr. Gilkey.

"Altogether," said Mr. Ames, emphatically. "And I say we've just got to drop off five hundred dollars on our next man. Why, when I was a boy, a minister didn't get over four or five hundred a year, and they managed to live on it somehow. They didn't throw their money around on all sorts of extravagances, I'll be bound."

"People say we have these things ourselves"—began Mr. Gilkey, mildly.

"I don't care if we do!" retorted Mr. Ames. "I earn my money and I know where it comes from."

Mr. Ames had, by this time, worked himself into quite a vehement state of mind. He ostensibly addressed Mr. Gilkey; but it is not strange that the consciousness that the stranger was an interested listener, caused him to elaborate his argument with the distinctness and precision of one who feels that he is making a good point. He now glanced for approval of his sentiments from Mr. Gilkey to the stranger, and the latter seemed encouraged to venture a remark.

"What particular style of man do you desire for a pastor?" he inquired.

"We want a first-class man," said Mr. Ames, with the air of reciting a well-learned lesson. "Some one who can hold his own with the other ministers in the place. Now you see,"—becoming confidential—"there's a certain set in our church that are strong on doctrine, and another class that don't care anything about it and won't hear it preached! They mostly don't belong to the church; but they come regularly and rent our best pews, and we feel bound to consider their feelings. But it takes a man with some tact to get along with these things and not offend any one."

"Indeed it must," said the stranger.

And Mrs. Gilkey said in further illustration of the point: "Why, we can never keep a man more than six months without one set or the other getting down on him. He's sure to be in hot water somewhere. Oh, dear! why didn't you catch that?"

This last exclamation was not addressed to the stranger, but to Mr. Gilkey. For in the excitement of the discussion the lady had loosened her hold upon the bandbox, and a sudden jolt of the cars had precipitated it into the aisle. With the aid of a fellow passenger and a cane, Mr. Gilkey fished up the precious parcel, and by the time this feat was accomplished the train was slowly moving into the Brandon station.

Mr. Ames shook hands with the stranger at parting, and said he was glad to have met him; after which ceremony the travelers repaired to their several destinations, Mrs. Gilkey, with vague forbodings lest the fall should have resulted disastrously to the contents of the bandbox; Mr. Ames, with a placid satisfaction with himself and the world at large; and the stranger—but as he is a stranger we cannot guess with any accuracy what his thoughts and feelings were.

The church was filled that Sabbath morning, and an agreeable flutter of expectation pervaded the well-dressed congregation. Their faces wore that wide-awake, alert expression of persons who expect to be entertained.

Mr. Ames felt very tranquil in spirit as he leisurely ascended the church steps, just in time for the opening anthem. As he leaned back in his seat and glanced over the crowded house, he said to himself that he for one was glad they were going to have a steady pastor, and he was going to do his best to encourage him. He'd get introduced after service, and invite him up to dinner to-morrow. He nudged his wife and confided to her this resolve, and she said 'twas "just the thing."

He craned his neck around to get a sight of the new man, but the desk completely hid him from view as he sat in the large pulpit chair resting his head on one shapely hand.

With the last notes of the anthem, Mrs. Gilkey sailed down the aisle in all the glory of her new bonnet, while her husband followed at a respectful distance behind the swaying plumes and spreading brim. Mrs. Ames whispered to her husband that 'twould be just like the Gilkeys to get in ahead with the minister, that woman was "so pushing." He must remember and speak to the minister right after church.

The choir sat down with a flutter and giggle. There was a brief pause. Then the preacher advanced to the desk and announced the hymn. As the mellow tones of his voice floated out over their heads, the waiting congregation smiled gracious approval. But what was it made Mr. Ames start so violently at the first words of the reader, stare hard at the desk, and sink back in his seat with an expression of blank dismay? Mr. Gilkey observed it from where he sat, and wondered what it meant. One look at the minister told the story. He was the stranger who had shared Mr. Ames's seat in the cars the night before!

The subsequent proceedings were fraught with painful interest for at least two of that audience. Mrs. Ames whispered to her husband that she noticed Mrs. Dr. Holmes wore a new seal skin, but he heeded her not, and when the congregation rose to sing he kept his seat, despite that lady's reproving look. He stole a furtive glance at Mr. Gilkey to see how he bore it. That gentleman, after some discussion with his wife, arose and held the book for her during the hymn, but he hung his head and looked crushed in spirit. Mrs. Gilkey, on the contrary, carried her head and the new bonnet with conscious dignity, and sang like a robin.

To Mr. Ames' excited imagination, that sermon was ten hours long, although the clock only indicated an hour and a half. Brandon had not heard such a sermon for many a day; but Mr. Ames, alas! couldn't have told a word there was in it. He counted the pipes in the organ, the crystals on the chandeliers, the panes of glass in the windows, in his frantic attempt to make the time pass. But, every time he returned from some abstruse numerical calculation only to hear the eloquent tones of the preacher, and behold the people hanging in rapt attention on every word.

Mr. Ames did not wait to be introduced to the minister after the service. Far from it! He fished his hat out from under the seat with unwonted alacrity, and made for the door, looking neither to the left nor right.

"That was a powerful sermon we've just heard, wasn't it brother Ames?" began Elder Stanclift, stepping softly out into the aisle. "Such depth and profundity of thought, such—"

But Mr. Ames stalked past him with averted gaze, and pretended not to hear him.

He jammed his hat down over his eyes, and shot out of the door with more haste than dignity. On the corner he stopped and waited for his wife, who demanded, sternly, how he supposed a man was going to come up to dinner if he wasn't invited? And he told her candidly, he was sure he didn't know.

Monday night the church held a meeting, at which they unanimously voted to give Mr. Grant a call. But, what was their surprise, on tendering him the pastorate, to find it promptly and positively refused. He said he felt that the responsibilities of the charge would be too great for his humble powers.

Vain were persuasions and arguments. He was firm, and some of the committee suggested, sadly, that they were afraid he had "heard something."

The fold is still without a shepherd. The weeds grow rank and tall in the parsonage yard, the house is empty—and so are the church pews on Sunday mornings. And still the candidates come and go, and report says the people are harder to suit than ever.

"This is the sixth time you have inquired for George Smith this morning," said the clerk at the postoffice delivery to a young colored boy. "An' dar hain't no letters?" "No. Who is George Smith?" "He's a cull'd gem'lan, ma'an, an' dar's a purleeceman huntin' fur him, an' his wife am watchin' ober on de co'ner, an' about 16 fellers who have lent him money am tryin' to get in de back way of de shop to lick him. 'Skuse his anxiety to git a letter, but he's 'spectin' one wid a ferry ticket in it."—Detroit Free Press.

Rest.

My feet are weary and my hands are tired,
My soul oppressed,
And I desire, what I have long desired,
Rest—only rest.

'Tis hard to toil when toil is almost vain,
In barren ways;
'Tis hard to sow and never garner grain
In harvest days.

The burden of my days is hard to bear,
But God knows best;
And I have prayed, but vain has been my prayer,
For rest—sweet rest.

'Tis hard to plant in spring and never reap
The autumn yield;
'Tis hard to till and when 'tis tilled to weep
O'er fruitless field.

And so I cry a weak and human cry,
So heart-oppressed;
And so I sigh a weak and human sigh,
For rest—sweet rest.

My way has wound across the desert years,
And cares infest
My path, and through the flowing of hot tears
I pine for rest.

And I am restless still; 'twill soon be o'er,
For down the west
Life's sun is setting, and I see the shore
Where I shall rest.

THE MATING OF HUMAN BEINGS.

The mating of human beings is a matter beyond the science of man. As near as may be, God joins two souls. The causes of selection are unknown, and we have little hope of their discovery. This we do know: Whatever breeding to secure brains has so far been had has been a complete failure. Now and then there has been a line of smart men—often a family of smart people, but we believe the union of a poet with a Philistine is more apt to produce a remarkable issue than the union of two poets. What instinct makes the sad philosopher to wed a merry unthinking wife may not be inquired into. What instinct fills a fat man with love for a lean wife, or a short woman for a tall husband, who can tell? Why a tow-headed woman should despise a "beautiful blonde moustache" is another hard question. But as to the progress of man: It is certain that we cannot make any great advance until we come to a better knowledge of the limitation of man. Already business men are killing themselves on every side because they overestimate their powers of recuperation. Undoubtedly nature is at work in every love affair to restore a disturbed balance. Perhaps life has largely to do with magnetism. The mere presence of an objectionable man is worse than his words or actions. If a man overwrought or overworking in the mind fall in love, he not unlikely seeks a flow of magnetism toward him that may restore his vitality. It is almost certain that he will fly from the absorptive soul that adores him for his mental grandeur He wants none of that, for it saps him, and, after satiety throws him away. How to raise William Shakespeares and Newtons, and Darwins and Ericssons is not to be known just now. It is a good philosophy which speaks of them as the products of an age, rather than of two parents.

REMINISCENCES OF HENRY CLAY.

Mr. Clay was tall and broad-shouldered, without being bulky or fleshy, and when at all excited was of stately and commanding presence. Though his long limbs were loosely put together, yet his manner was neither awkward nor uncouth, nor ever embarrassed; on the contrary, it was easy and natural, and wholly unpretentious; it was the easy, nonchalant air of a man accustomed to the ways of the world, and conscious that he was at least the peer of the foremost in every crowd in which he happened to be. Indeed, my own opinion is that he was never in the slightest degree, even in his early youth, awed by the presence of any one; he never seemed to feel, and my belief is he never felt, that he was ever at any time in the presence of any one superior to himself. And therefore he was not only strikingly at ease, but at home, wherever he was, whether among his neighbors or strangers, whether at a social gathering, or at the bar, or as the Speaker of the House of Representatives, or on the floor of the Senate; and in my judgment he would have felt equally at home at a conference with kings and emperors. He seemed to have not only an instinctive consciousness of his own strength, but of his own special capacity for leadership. Therefore he would take the lead to himself as if unconsciously, whatever the occasion, and as naturally and gracefully as if it were his birthright; and few there were, if any, who ever seemed to be surprised that he had taken the place for which nature appeared to have designed him. Indeed, without any appearance of self-assertion on his part, and as if unconsciously to himself, there was a something in his presence and his manner that gave to him an authoritive air, and made him for the time the central, the commanding figure of the group around about him.

On the tombstone of a little negro girl who is buried near Wetumka, Ala., is the following: "Henri Ritti Demi Ritter Emmi Ritter Sweet Potato Cream Tartar Caroline Bostwick, infant daughter of Bob and Sukey Catlin." It is not strange that the girl died young.

Uncle Tom's Cabin at the rink to-night.

The succulent but bony shad has arrived.

The watering cart is sadly needed these days.

Dr. Wilkins has been spending a few days in New York.

Barefooted boys, marbles, bonfires, etc. are numerous these days.

The first arbutus and the first apple tree blossom—where are they?

Charles Sanders is confined to the house, threatened with typhoid fever.

J. E. Condon has opened sewing machine repair rooms in Hatch's block.

The Law and Order League will hold its next meeting next Tuesday evening.

The Fox Comedy Company is booked to appear at the rink next Monday evening.

A lad by the name of Dwyer had his hand pinched in the machinery at the carpet mill Monday.

The Baptist society had a pleasant social Wednesday evening at the residence of the pastor.

Peter Metz, employed for some time past at the depot restaurant, has given up his duties at that place.

Mrs. L. E. Carpenter has returned to her store again, after a three-weeks' absence on account of sickness.

E. G. Hastings's house on West Main street is receiving a new coat of paint. Sexton is doing the job.

Miss Mary Mason is telegraph operator at Stafford Springs only this month, during, the regular operator's vacation.

The thrifty man will soon be planting his garden and spending his spare moments driving out his neighbor's hens.

The gentlemen of St. Paul's society will serve a "crazy tea" in the church parlors next Wednesday evening at 6.30.

Rev. F. B. Joy of Three Rivers occupied the pulpit of the Baptist church last Sunday morning, in exchange with Rev. Mr. Weeks.

Dr. Patterson will lecture for the Patterson club next Monday evening. The admission is twenty-five cents to all parts of the house.

Tenements—good tenements—are scarce in this village. No less than fifteen persons applied for one which was vacated a few days ago.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians did not have as large an attendance as was anticipated at their ball Monday night, and will hardly clear expenses.

O. P. Allen, agent of the Bay State Beneficiary Association, has paid Mrs. R. L. Goddard $5000, her husband having had a policy in that company.

A large audience attended the Easter supper and entertainment of the Crescent Club at St. Paul's church Wednesday evening, and they netted about $35.

A horse from Ferry's stable badly damaged the carriage to which it was attached on Thorndike street last Sunday evening, but did not harm the occupants.

Dickerson A. Calkins, a mechanic of considerable inventive talent, and interested in the manufacture of several machines, died at his home near the Wilbraham line last Saturday.

The old dam at Blanchardville has been partially washed away by the recent high water in the river, a section in the center giving way and drawing all the water from the pond above.

Excellent Sunday school concerts were given at the Congregational and Universalist churches last Sunday evening, the audience rooms being tastefully decorated with flowers and plants.

At the annual meeting of the Baptist society Monday evening these officers were chosen: Clerk, C. B. Fisk; treasurer, F. L. Brooks; standing committee, C. B. Fisk, Rev. A. W. Weeks, S. Edgerton.

Benjamin M. Davis, who was sentenced in 1885 to five years in state's prison for larceny from the person of Leander M. Breard of Palmer, is reported as having died at that institution of consumption.

The young people of the Congregational society had a good attendance at their entertainment Tuesday evening, and cleared nearly $30 for the piano fund. The "human melodeon" was pronounced "immense" by all present.

At the district court Wednesday Andrew McKenzie paid $6.58 for drunkness; Albert Deane of Holland was sent up in default of $14.06 for the same offense, and was also given three months for malicious mischief. Yesterday John Sutcliffe of Three Rivers paid $3.44 for an assault.

Last Sunday the mercury took an upward tendency, and registered 90° in the shade, the sudden change making it quite uncomfortable for those who were out of doors. Furnace fires were allowed to go out, doors and windows were left open, hammocks were indulged in, overcoats discarded, and a few parasols appeared on the street.

A drunken man was seen walking down the Boston & Albany tracks toward Tenneyville last Friday afternoon, and Officer Dawson started after him, overtaking him at the second crossing, where he had fallen and lay directly across the track, in the way of the approaching New York express. He gave the name of James Brown from Philadelphia.

While the law and order league are looking after the liquor business, it might be a good thing for them to keep an eye out for the gamblers, also. It is said there are two places in this villiage, either one nearly within a stone's throw of the post office, where gambling is carried on almost nightly. Such places would not be allowed in a city; why should they in a town?

The county commissioners have assessed the $95,000 county tax among the several towns as follows: Agawam, $1483; Blandford, 417; Brimfield, 606; Chester, 606; Chicopee, 6707; Granville, 438; Hampden, 480; Holland, 125; Holyoke, 18,912: Longmeadow, 1337; Ludlow, 877; Monson,1881; Montgomery, 146; Palmer, 3008; Russell, 522; Southwick, 669; Springfield, 44,158, Tolland, 209; Wales, 255; West Springfield, 3720; Westfield, 7502; Wilbraham, 836.

Entries for the athletic tournament at the rink to-morrow evening are numerous enough already to assure a good exhibition, and more will doubtless be made before the hour for the contest. The programme is: Catch as catch can wrestling match for a $40 gold medal and the championship of Western Massachusetts; tug of war between a picked team from Palmer and Wilbraham for a box of cigars; half mile go-as-you-please race, run or skate, for a gold medal and a silver cup; 880-yard running race between P. J. Murphy of North Wilbraham, the undefeated short distance runner, and an unknown, for $100 a side; a 200-yard dash for men over 40 and boys under 11, for a box of oranges or cigars; an attempt by P. J. Murphy to run four times around the rink in less than 48 seconds, the best time for the distance being 45 1–5, in open air. The Palmer Orchestra will furnish music for skating before and after the contests.

The Fire District Meeting.

The annual meeting of the fire district Tuesday afternoon brought out a goodly number of voters, several energetic "kickers" among them. J. N. Lacey was chosen moderator. Some sharpness was displayed in the matter of distributing the ballots for officers, the ticket bearing the name of the old board of engineers being held back until many had voted, the result being that G. A. Griffin, who has proved an able and efficient first assistant engineer, was dropped entirely from the board. The treasurer's report showed the receipts to have been $1984, and the expenses $1911, there being $73 in the treasury and $300 of the fire tax uncollected. The board of engineers reported $10,000 worth of machinery and apparatus under their control, and that the department had been called out six times during the past year. The first article taken up was that to see about providing a suitable fire alarm, and a motion to appropriate $500 for an electric one was made. This was strongly opposed by some, who thought the old way good enough, although it was shown that a good alarm had not been given in a year. After a good deal of discussion the motion was carried. It was stated that with a proper alarm and the jumper located near the post office, insurance rates on business risks would be lowered from 15 to 20 per cent, and the vote was 39 to 10. A motion to pay the firemen $10 each per year, the number to be limited to 20 men to each company, called out only one vote in opposition, motions to amend to $5, and to $2 each time called out, not being seconded. It was moved to indefinitely postpone the article concerning street lighting, but it was not carried. A proposition was then received from the Palmer Electric Light Company to furnish ten full-arc lights, to burn from twilight until daylight, every night in the year, for $110 per light, which included all cost of setting and caring for the same, to be located at any point within one-half mile of the post office. This was accepted after considerable debate, and H. A. Northrop, C. L. Alexander, J. A. Palmer and Dr. Holbrook were appointed to act with the prudential committee in locating the lamps. The board of engineers was instructed to confer with the insurance exchange in the matter of locating the jumper near the corner of Main and Walnut streets, and about securing a reduction in rates. These officers were elected: Chief engineer, George B. Kenerson; 1st assistant, W. H. Hitchcock; 2nd assistant, G. A. Bills; clerk, W. W. Leach; treasurer, C. E. Fish; prudential committee, J. N. Lacey, G. F. Wright, William Merriam. These appropriations were made: Fire alarm, $500; pay of firemen, $400; water, $800; engineer of steamer, $40; fireman, $24; janitor of engine house, $96; oil, waste, etc., $10; coal, $60; contingencies, $150; lighting streets, $1100; total, $3180.

MEMORANDA.

The moon has lost its job in this village.

Electric lights! 'Twill be fine. But it is rather an expensive luxury.

There are conservative citizens who think the electric light vote one of the best things done at the meeting.

Some voters who pay only a poll tax would not vote on the appropriations; but most of them were not troubled with any such ideas of propriety.

The talk about calling another meeting to rescind the electric light vote probably will not materialize. It wii not pay to get into a quarrel over the matter.

There is a good deal of growling among the heavier tax payers over the large appropriations, but many of them did not go near the meeting. Such growling is hardly consistent. A protest backed by a vote has some weight.

A $15,000 Fire.

THE UNION PASSENGER STATION BADLY DAMAGED.

The fine new passenger station of the Boston and Albany Railroad of this place, which was completed barely two years ago, was badly damaged by fire Wednesday afternoon, and would have been completely gutted but for the excellent work of our fire department. The fire started in the small stone building east of the main building, occupied by the American Express Co., and also the Boston and Albany baggage room. A few minutes after 5 o'clock the baggage master, sitting in his room, smelled smoke, and in a moment saw it issuing from the crevices in the partition between his room and the express office. Express Agent Crawford was just returning for a few moments'absence on the street, and opening the door of his office found it all ablaze at the rear and overhead. He attempted to save some money in a drawer, but had the back of his hand and neck badly blistered in doing so, and was driven out by the rapidly-spreading flames. In less than a moment, and with inconceivable rapidity, the fire swept along the sheathing under the roof to the east end of the covered platform, and before the locomotives standing near the station had a chance to sound the alarm the covered platform was a solid sheet of flame from the east end to the door of the waiting room, and across the end of the station to the New London tracks. Sanders's train from New London had just unloaded its passengers, and the windows in the passenger coach were broken by the heat before the engineer had a chance to pull away from the station.

An alarm was sounded, and the hose cart was soon on the scene. The boys did not stop to go around by the only approach provided by the railroad, but two or three sections of the famous fence were torn away, and two streams of water were soon playing from the hydrant. After the first mighty rush of fire the flames died away somewhat, and it did not at first seem that there was any particular danger of fire in the main building. But the fire worked along the sheating, and soon dense volumes of smoke began to pour out of the gable windows. Meantime the steamer had been called into action, and with three streams of water the firemen settled down to a long and hard struggle. At times it seemed as if the entire structure was doomed. The fire was very stubborn, and when extinguished in one place would burst out in some new and unexpected quarter. But inch by inch the firemen gained on it, and at 7 o'clock the fire was practically out, though it took a couple of hours more to make sure of and extinguish the small blazes that would spring up now and then. A steamer came from Springfield, but the fire was so well under control when it arrived that it was not unloaded, though the firemen that came with it laid 1100 feet of hose and helped put on the finishing touches.

The baggage room of the New London Northern road, in the southwest corner of the building, and the conductors' room over the ticket office, was completely burned out, and the roof over them. The garret over the main waiting room was pretty well burned, and the ceiling of the waiting room was charred considerably, but the rest of the woodwork in the room was only slightly damaged by fire about the ceiling. The fire did not get into the men's waiting room,and only to a small extent in the ticket office. The restaurant and rooms west of it were unharmed, except as the woodwork in the restaurant may be somewhat injured by water. The baggage room was only slightly scorched, but the express office was burned out thoroughly. The damage to the building is estimated at from $10,000 to $15,000. The stonework is unharmed, except possibly some of it at the southwest corner of the building. The express company lost $50 or so in money, and a number of packages. A trunk filled with packages of cloth just received from J. S. Holden & Co's. mill was hauled out of the way,though not until four of the bundles had caught fire. Three or four pieces of baggage were burned, including two trunks of samples. Manager Erskine removed the restaurant furniture, and the loss will be slight.

The larger part of the waiting room has been partitioned off, the room formerly used as a restaurant being used for that purpose, with ticket office, etc., in the restaurant kitchen, and the baggage room in Agent Rice's office. The American Express Company is located in the vacant store in the Nassowanno House block. No tickets were sold yesterday, the clerks being busy looking over the ticket case. The western tickets were not burned, but were somewhat damaged by water. Officer Dawson, the depot janitor, lost $20, in a table drawer in the conductor's room, and Baggage-master Newton two bank books in the baggage room. The steam heating apparatus is working again, not having been damaged, and the clock in the waiting room did not stop at all. The loss on the building is fully covered by insurance. As the building only cost $65,000, and less than one-quarter of it was destroyed, the published reports placing the damage at from $50,000 to $75,000 are not a little amusing.

STRAY SPARKS.

The "boys" did nobly.

Plenty of water, too.

Where are the croakers now?

The steamer had its "baptism of fire," and it worked beautifully.

The reservoir did not "give out." It hardly showed a trace of the draught upon it.

It was the hardest trial the fire laddies have had. Old firemen could hardly have done better.

Baggage Master Perry of the New London Northern road had one hand burned badly in removing baggage.

How would the "water pail brigade," to which a few citizens cling so devotedly, have succeeded in handling this fire?

The firemen had a stream on the flames in 5¼ minutes after the first alarm was sounded, having to tear down the fence besides laying their hose.

Palmer's compliments to the Boston and Albany Railroad. Palmer has shown its appreciation of the new station. Now will the B. & A. show its appreciation of Palmer by making the station comfortably accessible?

The cause of the fire is unknown, but the remarkable spread and volume of the flames would indicate that there must have been quite a leakage of gas, which had accumulated under the platform roof, ready to ignite at the first opportunity.

WALES.

Mrs. H. F. Thayer has growing in her front yard a pink lilac bush, from which she plucked in February a branch five feet in length, this she transfered to the house placing the same in water; in March, some three weeks from the time of transfer, this branch contained a finely developed blossom, the color of which was pure white.

WILBRAHAM.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Stacey are visiting friends in town.

Mrs. Henry Fuller of Monson, has been visiting at E. S. Keyes's.

Lutie M. Bruuer has been home from Harvard for a short vacation.

Mrs. A. L. Merrick and daughter, who have been in Monson the past year, will remain at home this summer.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of the South church met Wednesday afternoon and evening at the Allis House.

WEST WARREN.

C. W. Elwell is moving to Springfield.

An organ concert was given in the M. E. Church last Friday night.

Mrs. Geo. Barton, who has been ill for some time, is able to be out.

Mrs. Joseph Sedgley of Lowell, spent Sunday with her uncle, Daniel Bowdoin.

M. S. Marshall of No. 4. boarding house, will move into A. W. Crossman's tenement on Main street.

Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Bowdoin, of Limerick, Maine, spent a few days with his brother Daniel Bowdoin, on Church street.

J. Edward Lombard played the new pipe organ in the M. E. Church Easter Sunday with excellent taste and showing great talent.

BONDSVILLE.

Large numbers from this village have visited the theater at Thorndike this week.

George L. Chaffee of Rockville, Ct., has been engaged as clerk in O. A. Parent's store.

Quite a number of young men in this village contemplate purchasing bicycles this spring.

The children of the Methodist Sunday school gave a pleasant Easter Sunday concert last Sunday evening.

Miss Effie Herrick, teacher in the first primary school, goes next week to a more lucrative position in North Attleboro.

Rev. Mr. Fulton left Wednesday for conference, and there will be no preaching or Sunday school next Sunday. It is hoped he will be returned for another year.

THREE RIVERS.

Memorial services for the late Fred H. Warriner will be held at the Union church April 24th.

C. H. Murdock is improving the looks of his house on the outside by a fresh coat of white paint.

Miss Kittie L. Webb, teacher of the second primary, was taken very sick the first day of school, but so far recovered as to go home to Westfield Monday. It is hoped she will be back in her school soon.

As C. A. Simons of Ludlow was driving on School street Tuesday his horse ran away, bringing up at the fence opposite the school house, clearing it at a bound without hurting the horse or fence. The carriage was considerably damaged.

The ladies of the Union church will serve a hot biscuit and maple syrup supper in their rooms at the church next Wednesday evening. Supper from 5 to 8. After supper the usual entertainment consisting of music, readings and recitations, will be given. All are cordially invited.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

John Kelley has been appointed weigher of hay, straw and coal at Wilbraham street.

The selectmen have chosen Henry Cutler chairman, and have appointed J. A. Parker clerk for the coming year.

The selectmen were elected highway surveyors, and have appointed the same ones to take charge of the work as last year.

Orders at the grain mill are more plenty than for some time past,and the mill is running over time three or four nights a week.

W. M. Converse has sold his house to P. Eagan, Jr. for $1200, and has bought the Carver farm near Ludlow Center, where he is going to live.

C. E. Stacy, who left town two years ago and has been in business in Cambridge, has returned, and will occupy his house here as soon as repairs now going on are finished.

The Easter display of flowers was the finest we have ever had, and would have done credit to a larger church than ours, four canaries contributing a large amount of music. The day was very enjoyable, with an interesting sermon in the morning and a concert in the evening. Twenty-five new members were voted in at the adjourned parish meeting last Saturday night, both men and women. By a vote at the regular parish meeting in March, only church members can hereafter become members of the parish, it being the intention to have the church and parish as nearly identical as possible.

BRIMFIELD.

The Hitchcock Free High School commenced its summer term April 4th, but on account of the Annual Fast many pupils did not put in an appearance until this week. The present number is eighty-one.

The selectmen at their first meeting organized by the choice of Oscar F. Brown as chairman, and Frank R. Newton clerk.

In the death of Augustus Wheeler, Brimfield loses one of its citizens who for more than 60 years has been closely identified with the interest and business of the town. Born in Hubbardston Sept. 11th, 1799, he learned the trade of tanner and currier,came to Brimfield in 1822, and engaged with P. Warren & Son, and with the exception of a few years, when he returned home to care for his father and mother, has been a resident of Brimfield. Although quiet and unassuming, by his integrity and faithfulness in all things entrusted to him,he secured the confidence and respect of all. He served the town as selectman and in other capacities, and was representative to the Legislature in 1848. He was twice married, first, Dec. 18th, 1825, to Sophronia, daugher of Philemon and Hannah Warren, who died Feby. 4d, 1872. They had two children, a son and a daughter, who died in infancy. Remarried Sept. 14th, 1875, Mary W., daughter of Elijah and Submit Tarbell, who survives him. His funeral was held Monday at the town hall at 11 a. m.,the services being conducted by Rev. W. K. Pierce.

THORNDIKE.

M. S. Boies is to have a trotter this summer.

A raid was made on the Shugrue place this week.

William Phelps goes to White Rock,R. I., next week.

W. W. Evans has gone on the road for his spring trip.

J. H. Staples has just purchased a handsome top buggy.

High water has bothered considerably at No. 2 mill the past week.

The Clinton House office now contains a good safe for the storage of valuables.

The brass band has passed away and the bass drum has been crated and shipped.

Miss Florence Carter has been appointed assistant to Mrs. Murdock at the primary school.

D. W. Gray leaves us on Monday to oversee the spinning department of the Chicopee Mfg. Co.

The county commissioners viewed Church street in this village yesterday, and ordered the location changed as petitioned.

S. S. Carter, Jr., has sold "Connecticut Boy" to Ralph Thurston, and R. S. Milliken has sold the Belchertown colt to F. L. Snow.

The Windsor Theater Co. have been presenting good plays to large houses this week. The company is an excellent one and well managed.

Miss Wiley of Ware has been engaged as organist at St. Mary's church. There were special services Easter Sunday, mass at 8 a. m., and high mass at 11.

There were the usual services at the Congregational church Easter Sunday. The floral decorations were unique, a horseshoe with "Christ is risen" being prominent. The children's services at night were prettily carried out.

WARREN.

The young people are about forming a tennis club.

Miss Ida Sibley teaches drawing in the public schools.

William Shephard is the lowest bidder for collector of taxes.

The Woman's Relief Corps gave an Easter supper Monday evening.

The Flynt Construction Co. have the contract for repairing the foundry.

The ladies of the Methodist church gave a supper in the vestry Tuesday evening.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union met with Mrs. Kelly Thursday afternoon.

The suit of Mr. Sibley's heirs against the estate of L. J. Knowles is expected to come off next week.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society met with Mrs. George Shumway Wednesday afternoon.

The public library has received a large number of new books, which will soon be ready for delivery.

The Blake Co. gave the hose company $100 for their efforts in extinguishing the fire in the foundry.

Bertie Fish of New York,who accidentally shot himself with a pistol, has spent his vacations here for three seasons.

The milliners had their spring opening Thursday and Friday. Much taste was displayed in the new hats and bonnets, and a large number of ladies were out to see them.

The Ladies' Social Circle of the Universalist church has elected the following officers: President, Mrs. Charles Comins; vice president, Mrs. Lombard; secretary, Mrs. Mary Richardson; treasurer, Miss Lizzie Davis; directors, Mrs. Putnam, Mrs. Ward, Mrs. Heritage; collectros, Mrs. Moore, Mrs. Bliss.

All the churches observed Easter by appropriate sermons in the morning, and fine music. The decorations of flowers were very handsome in some of the churches. The Universalist and Methodist churches gave concerts in the evening. The children in the primary department of the Congregational Sabbath school were presented with Easter cards by their teachers.

LUDLOW.

Some of the French people gave a dance in Joy's Hall Monday evening.

Wesley Stockwell has moved into the blacksmith shop where J. L. Harding has been.

E. E. Chapman opened his house and heart last Friday evening and invited his neighbors in to eat maple sugar.

The town schools are doing well in Joy's Hall with three teachers and about seventy pupils. There are also three schools in the brick school house and about eighty pupils.

Rev. Edward Day preached an Easter sermon last Sunday morning, and the Sunday school gave a concert in the evening. The church was very prettily trimmed with flowers and the services were all very interesting.

Rev. Daniel Atkins preached his farewell sermon in the Methodist church at the Center last Sunday forenoon, closing a pleasant and profitable pastorate of three years. Mr. Atkins and family take with them to a new home—yet to be announced—the best wishes of their many friends and acquaintances in Ludlow.

At an adjourned meeting of the first parish it was voted to raised the pastor's salary $100. Mr. Dickey has been a very faithful and earnest worker in this church during his four years' pastorate, and has endeared himself to the people and community, and this advance in salary, though small, is worthily bestowed.

The semi-annual meeting of the Hampden conference of the Congregational churches, will be held with the church at Ludlow Center next Wednesday, the following being the programme:

10.00 a. m.—Devotional Exercises.
10 30 a. m.—Reports of Special Work in the Churches. (By delegates).
11.15 m.—Discussion: The Young People; their place and work in the churches. Opened by Rev. H. W. Pope, Palmer, Rev. M. S. Dudley, North Wilbraham.
12.30 p. m.—Collation.
2.00 p. m.—Business and Devotional Service.
2.30 p. m.—Discussion: Responsibility of the Individual for failure to make use of the religious privileges afforded in our communities. Opened by Rev. E. A. Reed, Holyoke, Rev. Henry Hyde, Holyoke.
3.30 p. m.—Discussion: What have our Churches to do in securing a more manifest power of the Spirit of God upon our communities? Opened by Rev. C. S. Beardsley, West Springfield, Rev. A. C. Hurd, Thorndike.

MONSON.

Adjourned town meeting next Monday.

Rev. Mr. Dight and family have left town.

Mrs. Horatio Lyon has gone to New York for a month.

Miss Idella Anderson is agent for the life of Henry Ward Beecher.

The class of '87 cleared about $40 at their entertainment last Friday night.

Mrs. Learned has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Stafford, the last few days.

Rev. Mr. Fraser's family have left town, and gone to Orleans, Mass.

Kinney Barton has the celler staked out for his new house on Pease Avenue.

The selectmen have organized with A. D. Norcross chairman and C. L. Peck clerk.

Dr. George E. Fuller has bought the Stuart Place on Pearl street, of Arba Squier.

Clothier Babbitt moves into the house vacated by Rev. D. Fraser on Pease avenue.

Work at Gage & Reynolds' is slacking up some, and a few men have already been discharged.

G. H. Newton has been confined to the house by sickness the past week, but is now recovering.

Miss Frank Fenton is on a business trip to New York City, getting the correct styles in dress making.

The Dorcas society of the Congregational church had a large gathering Wednesday afternoon at Mrs. Hutchinson's.

The social dance given by Danforth & Thompson Tuesday night was a complete success. Nearly sixty couples were in attendance.

Quite a number of Monson young people went to Palmer Tuesday evening, attending the entertainment at the Congregational church.

Work will soon be commenced on the new barn at the town farm. Omer Pease, J. H. Carpenter and W. M. Tucker are the building committee.

Everett Robbins, son of Jack Robbins, cut his leg very badly a few day since, although with proper care he will no doubt be out in a few weeks.

G. C. Flynt has gone to Chicago, where he hopes to close the contract for the granite for Judge Dickey's new $80,000 residence on the lake front.

Thomas Horton received a bad cut near the eye yesterday while at work for Arba Squier, sawing lumber at his steam mill on the Palmer road.

Rev. Mr. Dight being at the conference this week, there will be no service at the Methodist church Sunday morning. Sunday school will meet at the usual hour.

Frank. H. King, a former resident of Monson, has been appointed superintendent of the Hampden county truant school, and will commence his duties some time in June.

The annual meeting of the Universalist society was held last Monday evening, and reelected the old parish committee and the same clerk and treasurer. The treasurer reported all bills paid up to May 1st, with a balance of nearly $600 in the bank.

Rev. Mr. Fraser closed his labors with the Universalist society last Sunday, and commences with his new parish at Orleans next Sunday, although his resignation was not to take effect here until the first of May. Rev. G. V. Maxham will occupy the desk the next two Sabbaths, afterward the society will hear candidates.

The Washington Club give their second annual concert and ball in Central Hall next Thursday evening, the celebrated Marlboro orchestra of ten pieces furnishing music. The committee of arrangements is J. T. Murphy, R. J. Parker, J. M. Fagan, W. J. Doyle; reception committee, Wm. O'Connell, A. A. Murphy, F. G. Hughes, J. H. McBride; floor director, D. H. Scannell, assisted by T. J. O'Keefe and William McDonald. A supper will be served at the Monson House. The orders of dance are to be the neatest ever used in town. Before the dancing programme of eighteen numbers, the orchestra will render this programme:

Overture. Il Trovatore, Verdi
Euphonium Solo. Fantasie, Stewart
MR. CHARLES BUTLER.
Selection. Martha, Flotow
Piccolo Solo. Bob White, Cox
MR. ROBERT W. BIRD.
Pot Pourri. Operatic Medley, Bowman

OPENING OF MONSON ACADEMY.

Last Friday evening was the time set for the formal opening of the new academy, and the chapel was filled with an audience of our best people. The principal, Prof. C. C. Gove, spoke of the pleasure experienced by the teachers and scholars in greeting their friends in such a handsome and well equipped building, and said that "Monson academy still lives. Like the fabled Phœnix, it has risen from its ashes, renewed, strengthened, and destined, we trust, to greater usefulness in the future. Gratitude and honor are due to those who have contributed their money, their time, their thoughtful care and laborious effort that we might here behold the consummation of their plans—this elegant structure to which the youth are invited for moral and intellectual culture. For it must not be forgotton that there is a refining influence in stones, bricks and mortar, in wood, iron and brass, when combined in stately proportions and beautiful forms. This new academy is eloquent with myriad tongues proclaiming the devotion of its friends to its future prosperity. It is an honor to the town, a lasting memorial to its projectors and a sacred legacy to a noble object." Rev. James Tufts, a former principal, offered prayer, after which this programme was rendered by the scholars; assisted by some outside musical talent:

Chorus—"We Meet Again To-Night, Friends."
Declamation—"National Glory." Clay
George M. Converse.
Recitation—"The Painter of Seville." Miss Wilson
Gertrude Bell.
Declamation—"The Black Horse and His Rider." Shepard
Charles S. Craik.
Piano Trio—"The Charge of the Hussars." Spinder
Misses Peck, Squier, Thresher.
Recitation—"Jamie Douglass." Anon
Charles L. Ricketts.
Recitation—"An Order for a Picture." Alice Cary
Mary S. Peck.
Declamation—"Napoleon Bonaparte." Phillips
Daniel G. Reilly.
Violin Solo—Fantasie.
Miss Stimpson.
Recitation—"Kentucky Belle." Miss Wilson
Helen H. Thresher.
Declamation—"The Famine in Ireland." Prentiss
Patrick M. Shea.
Recitation—"Fall of Pemberton Mills." Miss Phelps
Nellie F. Squier.
Song—Above in Her Chamber," Eichberg
(with violin obligato),
Mrs. Norcross.
Declamation—"The Northern Laborers. Naylor
Robert M. Shaw.
Recitation—"Kate Ketcham." Phebe Cary
Lilla D. Whiting
Declamation—"Toussaint L'Overture." Phillips
Edward L. Morris.
Violin Duet—"Petite Symphone." Dancia
(Opp. 109, No. 2,)
Mr. Lane and Miss Stimpson.

Every number was well rendered, and the audience was well pleased with the entertainment. At the close Principal Gove thanked the audience for their presence, and urged the friends of the academy to call during school hours, so that they might learn what was being done by the pupils in the way of work, from actual observation.

AN extra session of Congress, probably in October, seems inevitable.

MR. BLAINE has been quite ill at Fort Gibson, I. T., but is improving.

SPRINGFIELD shudders over a possible tax rate of about $13.80 per $1000. Wonder how she would feel over a rise from $11.70 to $16 or $18, as is likely to be the case in Palmer.

GOV. AMES has appointed Saturday, the 30th inst., as Arbor Day, and especially recommends that in every city and town some street be selected and trees planted in memory of those who died for their country.

EX-GOV. PATTISON of Pennsylvania, E. Ellery Anderson of New York and David L. Little of Illinois have been appointed by the president commissioners under the act passed by the last Congress to investigate the affairs of the Pacific railroads,at a monthly salary of $750 each.

IN response to a letter from the president of the American Fishery Union in regard to the fishery act of the last Congress, President Cleveland has written a letter in which he intimates that if retaliation becomes necessary he will not merely shut out Canadian fish from our markets, but will make the retaliation and prohibition as general as possible, in order that it may be more effective.

A BIG "combine" of thieving freight conductors and brakemen has been unearthed on the Pittsburg, Cincinnati and St. Louis Railroad, and sixty-three men are now under arrest for a series of robberies extending over three years and amounting to $200,000 or more. A road which can stand such wholesale robbery for so long a time ought to be rich, and surely is shiftless.

IN 1876 an attempt was made to steal the remains of President Lincoln from his resting place in Oak Ridge cemetery, near Springfield, Ill. A guard of honor was then formed, and the body secreted. Yesterday morning the remains, with those of Mrs. Lincoln, were returned to the vault monument, where it is hoped they may remain hereafter in peace.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Florida's quaint old city which attracts thousands of Northern visitors every winter, had a serious conflagration Tuesday morning, which destroyed $250,000 worth of property, including the old Spanish cathedral, the St. Augustine hotel, court house, and other buildings. One of the laundry women in the hotel perished in the flames. The burning of the cathedral, with all its interesting relics, will be felt as almost a national loss.

THE gullibility of human nature is something passing comprehension. Mrs. Sarah E. Howe, the "woman's bank" swindler who, some seven years ago, had obtained $600,000 from confiding woman under promise of 8 per cent a month interest, and was sent to the house of correction for three years when the bubble burst, was no sooner out from behind the bars than she resumed her old business. Deposits came in again, and now she has quitely absconded from Boston with $50.000 belonging to her dupes. Verily, the fools are not all dead.

JUDGE DEADY, in the United States circuit court of Oregon, has rendered a decision of considerable importance concerning the scope of the interstate commerce act. The Oregon and California Railroad, which lies wholly within the state of Oregon, has been carrying wheat and other agricultural products destined for points outside the state at lower rates than for local freight, and the judge decides that the road is justified in so doing, as it is not an interstate road. If this decision stands, it must nullify the vital part of the law, for if two roads, running through adjoining states, may work this way, it will be a hard matter to prevent another road from doing the same thing, even if it does run through two or more states.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, April 13th, 1887.

The House bill to prohibit the dispensing of liquor by social clubs, or by clubs formed for the purpose of evading the license law, has been passed through both of its stages by the House without a word of debate, but it has not yet passed the Senate. Probably it will be opposed there. The liquor interest feels sure of twenty-one senators (or a clear majority of that body) in its favor when any real restriction is proposed. So, though the House is strongly anti-liquor, yet it cannot do anything, as long as the Senate is controlled by the liquor interest. This is of importance in view of the supposed, or expected, effort of the Republican party to show particular consideration this year to the prohibitionists. But right here comes in an essential fact. In at least three senatorial districts a Prohibitory Republican was defeated by a Democrat where the combined votes of the Republicans and third party Prohibitionists would have elected the Republican. If the Prohibitionists in those districts had voted for the Prohibitory Republican, the temperance men, instead of the liquor men, would have had control of the Senate. So that the present and prospective failure of the Republicans to satisfy the Prohibitionists with this years' legislation is traceable directly to the latter's making it impossible by practically using their influence for Democrats. The Liquor Dealers' Protective Association did all it could to get a favorable Senate and succeeded—the Senate being a smaller body and the House being too large to handle.

On Friday Senator Hartwell of Worcester presided in the Senate and Mr. Darling of Somerville in the House. Both are among the oldest men in the Legislature. The people may yet hear more of both of them, if they remain in politics. Especially is this true of Mr. Darling. He is a ready, forcible and logical speaker, but the one thing which gives him weight is his evident thorough integrity and moral earnestness. He is himself convinced of the righteousness of his cause (he is chairman on the part of the House of the liquor committee) and so his speeches carry conviction. Let the public keep an eye on him.

An attempt in the House Friday to compel all railroads to carry fire extinguishers in all their passenger cars failed by a large vote, because it appears that there is already law enough on the subject.

The employers' liability bill was postponed by the House on Friday to next Thursday without debate.

The bill for advertising committee hearings this year up to April 1 has been $5328 95, against $2031.18 last year and $6.049.49 in 1885. The large sum in the latter year compelled a change in the law, but this year it is nearly as bad. The railroad committee alone spent $982 95 in advertising and the judiciary came next with $488.40.

The Senate passed the Beverly division bill without debate Friday, 18 to 12.

This week's topic has been the alleged corruption in the passage of the bill to incorporate the new town of Beverly Farms. Senator Slattery of Middlesex made in the Senate last week certain charges of "unfair, undignified and dishonest means" used for the passage of the bill. But he said nothing definite which would be used as a basis for investigation. Last Saturday evening, however, at an indignation meeting in Beverly against the passage of the bill, one Dennis W. Quill said (or is reported to have said) that he saw $1000 paid for Senate Slattery's vote,—not paid to the senator, but paid to somebody who was to try by means of it to get the senator's vote. Even that statement, I am told by a gentleman who would naturally make the case as strong as possible, goes further than the facts. Quill also said (or is so reported) that three representatives had been offered $300 apiece for their votes, and that one Darling of Somerville (one of the majority of the committee on towns) had been offered $2000 for his vote. Petitions for an investigation came in from Henry L. Pierce and other well known citizens. Leading newspapers demanded that the Legislature clear itself from the reflection upon its integrity. So orders for a separate investigation by each branch were introduced on Monday, laid over to Tuesday and adopted unanimously, excepting the vote of Mr. Walker of Worcester in the House. In the House debate a fresh scandal was started by Mr. Fales of Milford. He said that on this same matter last year a representative had said that he got $200 for his vote, and that on a day when a vote in the Senate promised to be close, a senator was made drunk and carried in a hack to Brighton. He further stated that a senator last year was offered $1500 for his vote. President Boardman has appointed as the members of the Senate investigating committee Messrs. Hartwell of Worcester, Forbes of Worcester, Alger of Middlesex, Reed of Bristol and Wilber of Suffolk. He desired was to put on three Republicans and two Democrats, also three who favored the Beverly Farms bill and two opposed it, but all are Republicans except Mr. Alger. Speaker Noyes will appoint the House committee to-morrow afternoon. The Senate committee met after adjournment to-day and voted to begin their inquiry at ten o'clock Monday forenoon. All of the senators will be put upon the stand to tell what they know of any influence.

The Senate has postponed the Sunday bill to April 19th, after amending it so that barbers' shops shall not be open Sundays. Other amendments will be offered.

By a vote of 16 to 14 the Senate, after debate, passed the motion of Senator Hartwell of Worcester, to refer to the next Legislature the bill to make the first Monday in September a legal holiday by the name of "Labor's Holiday."

Gov. Ames has sent a message to the Legislature recommending coöperation with the United States in the Bureau of Animal Industry to stamp out cattle diseases.

By a vote of 12 to 23 the Senate refused to order a third reading of the bill to allow women to vote on the issue of liquor licenses.

A large vote was given in the House against the bill to extend the scope of the pharmacy and registration law.

The railroad committee have reported a bill to allow the Boston and Maine road to buy the Eastern and all the small roads operated by either of them.

At the council meeting Wednesday afternoon, Gov. Ames appointed the following to the board of examiners under the new dentistry law: For one year, George E. Mitchell of Haverhill and John F. Dowsley of Boston; for two years, J. Searle Hurlburt of Springfield and Eugene V. McLeod of New Bedford; for three years, Luther D. Shepard of Boston.

A unanimous adverse report has been made by the joint judiciary committee on the resolve for holding a constitutional convention.

The committee on banks and banking have reported that it is inexpedient to extend the limit to which savings banks may loan money on security of personal property.

The Legislature this year, I think, is a better working body than last year, though that is not saying much, as the general court of 1886 was decidedly below the average of efficiency, as that of 1885 was above. I refer to the House particularly, as that is practically the most important branch of the Legislature. No man is entitled to be called leader of the House, yet on the liquor question, as above noted, which is one of the most important, Mr. Darling of Somerville is the unquestioned leader and can always command a large following of men who will vote as he thinks best.

LANDON.

WHAT TRUE MERIT WILL DO.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years, has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of coughs, colds and the severest lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when the diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price, 75 cents, large bottles. 46-eow-1y

NOW IF EVER

Buy the place lately occupied by John L. Bacon on Main street in Palmer, near the Agricultural ground, upon which are good and new buildings with several acres of land suitable for building lots. I can sell the same very cheap and on easy terms. I have several very desirable places for sale in Palmer upon Main, Squier, Park, Maple, Pine, Converse and Central Streets and Fox Avenue.

Among the places in Thorndike I have for sale, is the upon which is a new house, (slated), with barns and out-buildings all in good repair, several acres of land, a part of which is desirable for building lots. As Mrs. Kelliher is desirous of moving elsewhere, I will sell the property cheap upon very easy terms.

KELLIHER PLACE,

I Have for Sale

Houses in Springfield, West Warren, Monson and Three Rivers, and farms in New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut and New York. Many desirable small farms and many valuable large farms. Any one wanting a farm of 40 acres within 1 mile of the village of Palmer capable of keeping six cows, for less than $2000. Good buildings and on main road. Come and see me within one week.

THE REPUBLICAN

Springfield, Mass.

DAILY, $8; SUNDAY, $2; WEEKLY, $1.

The Republican aims to be a newspaper in the broadest and highest sense. It prints all the legitimate news of the day without fear and favor, unembarassed by personal or partisan obligations, and in compact, well arranged form. Its facilities for gathering and publishing the news are unsurpassed outside of the largest cities, and are constantly improving.

The Republican is distinctively a New England newspaper, although its reputation is national. Its local field embraces not only Springfield but all of Western Massachusetts, Northern Connecticut and Southern Vermont, and the news of this section it presents with great care and fullness. In no other journal can the dwellers in this region find so complete a daily record of home affairs.

It is not merely a journal of news, but undertakes to instruct and entertain its readers by the publication of a rich variety of literature and miscellaneous matter, embracing home and foreign correspondence, stories, poetry, book reviews and notices, religious selections and discussions, special articles and compilations for the farmer and mechanic, for women and children, dramatic, art and society notes, etc.

The Weekly Republican

Contains the cream of the seven Daily issues carefully edited and arranged in compact form. It is an admirable newspaper for farmers and all others who are unable to read the Daily and Sunday editions and costs only one dollar a year, or ten cents a month for shorter periods; 3 cents a copy.

THE WEEKLY REPUBLICAN and the RURAL NEW YORKER, the best farm weekly in America, will be sent together one year for $2.50.

We Too.

But then, you see, I love him. Just that—love.
I wonder if you know one little bit
What the word means? you favored ones who rove
Down beaten paths with all things smooth and fit;
With no false note to jar amid your airs;
With no black cloud to blot your sunshine out;
No yearning want to madden in your prayers;
No "Why?" to deepen ever bitter doubt.

Easy when noonday floods the clustered flowers,
When wealth and world's approval gird you round.
To learn the fairy tasks of smiling hours,
And "do the duty" fashioned fair when found;
Passing decorous through the guarded life,
Giving from heaped-up coffers, smiling sweet;
Wondering that others fret so in the strife;
Terming each woe untasted, "judgment meet."

"Friendship," "affection," "fondness," pretty phrases!
Well symboling the fragil things they mean;
Like rosy creepers that, 'mid grass and daises,
Twine over meadow paths a graceful screen;
Till some strong foot comes crashing from the hill,
Treads down the tendrils, flings the flowers apart,
And the full moonlight, pitiless and chill,
Glares on the bare, cold path—the barren heart.

But love its strong vitality asserts
His quenchless power, crush it as you may;
The slow rains rot, the cruel east wind hurts,
But the rich blooms press up to the day.
Darling, the holy bond 'twix you and me
Is pure, and strong, and prompt to do and dare,
As when we knelt beside our mother's knee
And learnt from her sweet lips our baby prayer.

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

Force of Habit.—Lady (in grocery store)—"Let me have a pound of butter, please." Clerk (who used to tend in a cigar store)—"Mild or strong?"—Harper's Bazar.

Nitro-glycerine is said to be a remedy for nervous headache. Taken in sufficient quantities it is warranted to eliminate all disease from the human system, and the system also.—Hartford Post.

"Let us shake off the past!" shouts a Washington paper; "let us no longer cling to the old forms!" Hooray! That's our party. Bring us some new forms to cling to; say about—well, nothing older than 23.—Burdette, in Brooklyn Eagle.

"There's no accounting for tastes in this world," said Mr. Henpeck to his wife as he laid down the newspaper. "What's the matter now?" she asked shortly. "Why, there's that Anarchist Spies, he'd rather get married than be hanged."—Washington Critic.

"Mr. Lighthead," said Johnny, "my sister treats you better'n she does me."

"Does she, Johnny?" asked Lighthead, with a laugh. "Why do you think so?"

"Well, I heard her tell ma she gave you lots of taffy, but she never gives me any."—Exchange.

Wanted to Try It.—Granger—Got all the modern improvements in this here tavern, I s'pose, stranger? Clerk—Certainly, sir; what can I order for you? Granger—Wall, young man, since yer so perlite, you might send me up one o' them Turkish baths to m' room.—Tid Bits.

"May the angels shower blessings upon you forever and ever," is the way a Japanese salutes a fellow-countryman on every occasion. Take it on a cold morning when a fellow can't even stop to wipe his nose, and it must be a kind of a bore.—Burlington Free Press.

Omaha mamma—You must not contradict me, Dot. When I say a thing is so, you must not say it isn't. Little Dot—Well, what you said isn't so, anyhow. Mamma—Now, that is contradicting. Dot—Well, let's begin over again, and I'll say it isn't so first.—Omaha World.

She—Where are you going, Charlie? He—Going to the theater. She—Ah, I understand; the ballet. But why don't you go to the dog show instead? I think you would like it ever so much better. The dogs, you know, have four; twice as many each as the ballet dancers.—Boston Transcript.

"Will you trust me, Fannie?" he cried, passionately grasping her hand. "With all my heart, Augustus, with all my soul, with all myself," she whispered, nestling on his manly bosom. "Would to heaven you were my tailor," he murmured sotto voce, and tenderly he took her in his arms.—Washington Critic.

Sharp Settlements.—"There is one thing about me," said Dumley as he wrote his name in the hotel register, "I pay as I go, and don't you forget to remember it!" "Any baggage?" demanded the clerk. "No." "Then you won't pay as you go; you'll pay as you come! Two dollars, please, and remember not to forget it."—Puck.

Guest (at restaurant)—Here, waiter, take it away; there's a fly in this soup.

Waiter—'Skuse me, boss, but dat ain't no fly.

Guest—I say it is, take it away.

Waiter—All right, boss. But dat ain' no fly. Das a roach, boss. We dou' have no flies yer in wintah time. Dis am a fus' class place, an' we don' serve nuffin outen season, sah.—Washington Critic.

Some Other Time.—"Any bear about this neighborhood?" he inquired as he got off the train and leaned an eight-hundred-dollar breech-loader carelessly in the hollow of his arm. "The woods is full of 'em," said a citizen; "one of 'em bit my brother's leg off yesterday. Are you loaded fer b'ar, mister?" "No, sir," replied the young man, hesitatingly boarding the train; "I'm only loaded for rabbits."—Harper's Bazar.

NAPOLEON THE GREAT

(there was only one great Napoleon) wished the word impossible banished from the dictionary. In many cases where leading physicians have pronounced a cure impossible, consumptives and victims of other fell diseases have been restored to health by using Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Soothing, healing, in its nature its power over scrofulous and pulmonary diseases is simply marvelous. Far more nutritive than cod liver oil, a powerful and invigorating tonic and as harmless as it is powerful.

SETTLED CONSUMPTION CURED.

Several years ago a severe cold settled on my lungs. The most popular physician that ever practiced here attended me for a long time, but to no avail. After a consultation he said I had settled consumption and gave me up. I was advised to try Dr. Seth Arnold's Cough Killer, and to my own and to my friends astonishment it cured me, and I am now a well, hearty man.—Thomas D. Paine, Jeweler, Woonsocket, R. I. For sale by all druggists. Price 25c., 50c. and $1 per bottle.

Mothers, teething and fretful children need Dr. Arnold's Soothing and Quieting Cordial. Druggists, 25c.

MARY'S STORY.

"There is no danger, engine disabled, another telegraphed for, will be here in about half an hour"—called out the conductor of a passenger train on the Clifford railroad in answer to the inquiries of the passengers as to the reason of their sudden halt in the woods.

As if determined to make the best of the situation, the people began to turn seats and gather in little groups for conversation.

Presently, a gentleman said in a tone of voice so loud as to be distinctly heard above the hum of voices: "Yes, our place has gone for license; but we don't worry over that. I tell you we've got a board of selectmen who have the genuine back-bone in them; they'll see that licenses are given only to responsible parties and make them live up to the conditions of them, too."

As he said this a shudder passed over my seat-mate, and she lifted her eyes to the speaker across the aisle with a look in them like that of a hunted animal who turns upon its pursuers in hopeless appeal for its life.

I had already been conversing with her and had found her to be an intelligent Irish woman whose whole demeanor was that of one schooled to the calm endurance of some great pain or wrong. My curiosity, as well as sympathy was aroused, and I sought by gentle questioning to get possession of her life story.

"Why were you disturbed by what the gentleman said," I asked.

"I know him well, and it is true that our town officers are really in earnest and have determined that every man who takes out a license shall strictly abide by the law."

"I hate the word license," she exclaimed in a low, fierce tone, while her eyes were eloquent again with pain too deep and terrible for tears. She was reticent at first, but after a little told me all.

During her early married life her home had been in a large manufacturing city. The drink habit fastened upon her husband who vainly strove to overcome it. He was smart and capable, a favorite with both employers and employed, and they often said: "If John Manning is drunk and crazy as a loon on Sunday, you will find him in his place all right on Monday morning."

"Do ye see that mark, ma'am, over me eye? One Sunday John struck me there, and when he came to himself and saw what he had done—John was a tinder husband and set a store by me—he said, 'Mary, I'll go—it will niver happen again. I'll go somewheres where there's no drink to tempt a fellow like me.'"

"I don't want ye to think, ma'am, he lost his job. They gave him as good character as iver a man wants, and he got a fine place right off as overseer in the mill in Lanewell and there wasn't a saloon in the village." How happy we were there, ma'am. John had good wages and niver a bit did he drink; and there my Norah and Ailsie were born. Oh, John was so proud of 'em; and there wasn't any velvet too good to dress 'em in, John used to say. But bye and bye they got license there, too. Some city folks sent men and money out to get votes, and the good folks of Lanewell were all asleep—didn't half of 'em vote at all, and when they waked up to find a saloon right side of the postoffice, they didn't seem to care much, for they did just as you say, the selectmen would 'tend to 'em all right. Mr. Fulton, who owned the mill John worked in, liked a little drink now and then, and when the men came to buy goods he would treat them at the saloon and—"

Here she faltered, gasped and added:

"He asked my John, too, and he felt proud and pleased like with their notice. When I talked to him he'd say: 'Mary, can't you trust me? Think how long I've been sober. I 'aint goin' to drinkin' agin. But he did, and more than once I hid the children in a little room in the attic when he'd come home so crazed like. They said the selectmen would fix it all right, and I went to 'em and I said I want you to stop Jim Barry from enticin' my John into his saloon and sending him home every once in a while ravin' like a wild beast. They was kind to me, said they'd speak to Jim, but it didn't do any good. So one day I just dressed Norah and Ailsie in their very best and I trained Norah to kneel down and put up her hands in such a purty way and say, 'Please, Mister Jim Barry, don't sell my papa any more liquor to drink,' and I took 'em right into his saloon, and the dear child did as she was bid, ma'am, and looked up at him so pleadin' like while she was a speakin,' her great eyes all shinin' with tears; but Ailsie just clung frightened to my hand and only said 'please Misser,' in a little weak way. He looked real mad and independent like, and pointed to something framed and hung up like a picture, and said: 'Do you see that? It's my license; do you see those names of the selectmen? That, ma'am, gives me a right to sell your husband all the liquor I choose to, and shaking his fist in my face, I shall do it.'"

She paused for breath, and her face was white as death as she whispered hoarsely:

"He watched his chance and when John took a little and began to be bewildered like, he just set up the drinks and treated and treated, sayin' he'd send him home in good shape to them saucy brats of his;' and when he was all maddened with drink and didn't know nothing what he was about, he tackled a man on the street, knocked him down and killed him. And now my John is in states' prison for life, though he didn't know nor remember anything about it. But Jim had a license you know, from the selectmen."

PECULIAR

To itself in many important particulars. Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One hundred doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad; no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Be sure to get

Catarrh. It is most efficacious for this disease. Cold in the head, etc.

"POND'S EXTRACT CATARRH CURE,"

specially prepared to meet serious cases, shou'd be applied with Pond's Extract Nasal Syringe.

Rheumatism, Neuralgia.

No other preparation has cured more cases of these distressing complaints than the Extract. Pond's Extract Plaster is invaluable in these diseases, Lumbago, Pains in the Back or side, etc.

Diphtheria, Sore Throat, Use the Extract promptly. Delay is dangerous.

Piles, Blind, Bleeding or Itching. It is the greatest remedy known; rapidly curing when other medicines have failed. Pond's Extract Ointment is of great service where the removal of clothing is inconvenient.

For Broken Breasts and Sore Nipples. Mothers who have once used the Extract will never be without it. Pond's Extract Ointment is the best emollient that can be applied.

Female Complaints. In the majority of female diseases the Extract can be used, as is well known, with the greatest benefit. Full directions accompany each bottle.

CAUTION.—POND'S EXTRACT has been imitated. The genuine has the words "POND'S EXTRACT" blown in the glass, and our picture trade-mark on surrounding buff wrapper. None other is genuine. Always insist on having Pond's Extract. Take no other preparation. It is never sold by bulk or by measure. Sold everywhere, Prices 50c., $1, $1.75. A Great Surgeon and A Noted Physician.
The distinguished American physician, Dr. R. C. Flower, is a cousin of that eminent surgeon, scientist and author, Prof. Wm. H. Flower, F. R. S. of London. Prof. Flower is one of the Queen's surgeons; he is also the director of natural history in the British Museum, an intimate friend of Prof. Huxley, and a leading contributor to the Encyclopedia Britannica and other standard works. While the professor has been thus prosecuting his research in surgery and science in the Old World, Dr. R. C. Flower, (much his junior in years) has been engaged in exhaustive study in the realm of medicine, and compelling the flowers, plants and trees of the earth to yield their virtue for the cure of the sick and dying of this age. The splendid success that has crowned his patient scientific study is witnessed in his wonderful Nerve and Brain Pill, and that king of all tonics, and specific cure of dyspepsia and indigestion, his Liver and Stomach Sanative. These great remedies are now for sale by all druggsits, and are performing miraculous cures in tens of thousands of cases. They will cure you. —THE—

Her Sphere.

No outward sign her angelhood revealed,
Save that her eyes were wondrous mild and fair—
The aureole round her forehead was concealed
By the pale glory of her shining hair.

She bore the yoke and wore the name of wife
To one who made her tenderness and grace
A mere convenience of his narrow life,
And put a seraph in a servant's place.

She cheered his meagre hearth—she blessed and warmed
His poverty, and met its harsh demands
With meek, unvarying patience, and performed
Its menial task with stained and battered hands.

She nursed his children through their helpless years—
Gave them her strength, her youth, her beauty's prime,
Bore for them sore privation, toil and tears,
Which made her old and tired before her time.

And when fierce fever smote him with its blight,
Her calm, consoling presence charmed his pain;
Through long and thankless watches day and night,
Her fluttering fingers cooled his face like rain.

With soft magnetic touch, and murmurs sweet,
She brought him sleep and stilled his fretful moan,
And taught his flying pulse to repeat
The mild and moderate measures of her own.

She had an artist's quick perceptive eyes
For all the beautiful; a poet's heart
For every changing phase of earth and skies,
And all things fair in nature and in art.

She looked with woman's keen delight
On jewels rich and dainty drapery,
Rare fabrics and soft hues—the happy right
Of those more favored but less fair than she.

On pallid pearls, which glimmer cold and white,
Dimming proud foreheads with their purity;
On silks which gleam and glitter in the light,
And shift and shimmer like the summer sea.

On gems like drops by sudden sunlight kissed,
When fall the last large brilliants of the rain;
On laces delicate as frozen mist,
Embroidering a winter window pane.

Yet, near the throng of worldly butterflies,
She dwelt, a chrysolis, in homely brown,
With costliest splendor flaunting in her eyes,
She went her dull way in gingham gown.

Hedged in by alien hearts, unloved, alone,
With slender shoulders bowed beneath their load,
She trod the path that Fate had made her own,
Nor met one kindred spirit on the road.

Slowly the years rolled onward; and at last,
When the bruised reed was broken, and her soul
Knew its sad term of earthly bondage past,
And felt its nearness to the heavenly goal,

Then a strange gladness filled the tender eyes,
Which gazed afar beyond all grief and sin,
And seemed to see the gates of Paradise
Unclosed for her feet to enter in.

Vainly the master she had served so long
Clasped her worn hands, and, with remorseful tears
Cried: "Stay, oh, stay! Forgive my bitter wrong;
Let me atone for all those dreary years!"

Alas for heedless hearts and blinded sense!
With what fain welcome and what meagre fare,
What mean subjections and small recompense,
We entertain our angels unaware!

THE CALICO FROCK.

It wasn't a hot day, nor a cold day, nor a damp day, but it was an atrocious day, a clammy day, an unbearable day, a day that made your clothes stick to you like poor relations, that brought out cold sweats on pitchers and goblets, that made your back a race-course for contemptible little chills, and the rest of your body a target for a thousand invisible pins and needles, that made the grasshopper a burden, and the dusty, begrimed city a pandemonium, that made Simon Griggs, bachelor, of the firm of Griggs, Makem & Co., the great clothing merchants, shut up his ledger and start for the country by the next train, remarking to old Grimsby, the head clerk, that "the city was stifling." To which that worthy replied: "So it is, but how about the fellows that can't get out of it and must stay and be choked?" A problem which I suspect our friend of the firm of Griggs, Makem & Co. troubled himself very little about, being just then busy in looking into the dusty recesses of that picture gallery which memory furnishes and arranges for us all, at a single landscape hanging there. A low house, with mossy, overhanging eaves, shaded by branching elms, with level fields stretching off in the foreground toward the sparkling water on one side and dusky woods on the other; and there, dusty, sweating and tired, Solomon found himself just about sunset. Out came a ruddy-cheeked, smiling old lady, in a cap and apron that had attained a state of snowy perfection unknown to city laundresses.

"Why, bless me, if it isn't little Sol; why, who'd have thought of seeing you?" and she folded the stalwart, bearded man in as warm an embrace as though he were in reality still the little Sol of former days.

"And how do you do, Sol? Come in, don't stand out there. You know the little path and the way to the pantry yet, I dare say. Come in, you needn't start back, it's only Rachael."

"But I didn't know you had any young ladies with you, Aunt Hester."

"It's only Rachael, I tell you; Rachael Hart, the seamstress. Are there no women in your city that you are afraid to face a little country girl?"

"Little indeed," thought Solomon, as he acknowledged his aunt's somewhat peculiar introduction, and not pretty, either, with large eyes of that uncertain gray that sometimes beam darkly blue, and then deepen into brown, with a smooth, low forehead, and light brown hair, drawn tightly across each ear, just revealing its crimson tip; a face irregularly featured, and rendered still more striking by the singular contrast between its extreme pallor and the intensely scarlet lips, the personification of neatness, the embodiment of reserve.

"An odd little person," thought Solomon, "but it's none of my business!" and dismissing her from his mind, he proceeded to the much more important business of making himself presentable at Aunt Hester's table.

Solomon did ample justice to the snowy bread, golden butter and luscious strawberries, and later, as that worthy was indulging in a stroll across the fields, he lifted up his eyes and beheld the little seamstress, whose very existence he had quite forgotten, under a venerable cherry tree, making desperate efforts to seize a tempting branch on its lowest bough, and looking almost pretty with her flushed cheeks and flashing eyes.

Now Sol was a gallant man, decidedly the preux chevalier of the firm of Griggs, Makem & Co., so that whenever, as had once or twice happened, a woman ventured into the mouldy shades of that establishment, Sol was the man whom destiny and the other partners selected to parley with the enemy.

Advancing therefore, with a happy mixture of confidence and condescension, Sol plucked the cherries and was about to present them, when independence, in a calico frock, stepped back with a cool:

"Keep them yourself, sir, I don't care for them."

"I thought you wanted them," stammered Sol.

"So I did, because they were difficult to obtain. Had they been on your aunt's table, I would not have touched them. It is the glow of triumph that gives a pleasure to its zest. Eat the cherries yourself, and good evening, sir."

"Stop a moment!" said Sol, not a little astonished; "that is, I mean, permit me to accompany you?"

"No, you would expect me to entertain you, and that would be too much trouble."

But, if instead, I should happen to entertain you?"

"You cannot."

"Why?"

"You could tell me nothing new. You are but a crucible for converting bales of cloth into the precious ore that all the world goes wild after. No doubt you are all right in your way, but there are alchemists who could transmute our humdrum daily life into golden verse or heavenly thought. To such a one I might listen; but you and I have nothing in common."

"Not even our humanity?" asked Solomon.

The stern face of the girl softened a little, but only for a moment.

No," she answered, angrily, "not even that. I, you know, am made of the inferior clay, you of the pure porcelain. Do you not remember how even good Aunt Hester told you that there were no young ladies with her, only the seamstress. You are slightly bored already, and think me odd enough to amuse you for a while; but if some of those gay ladies, among whom I hear you are such a favorite, were to come here, you would not even know me. Good evening, sir."

"What a furious little radical," thought Sol, with an uneasy laugh, as he watched her retreating figure. After all, he was not quite sure that she had not spoken the truth.

If the calico frock had been a flounced silk, for instance, how many degrees more deferential would have been his manner in presenting the cherries?"

Query the second:

If the calico frock had been walking down Broadway about four o'clock in the afternoon, would he, Solomon Griggs, of Griggs, Makem & Co., as willingly escort it as across those green fields where, if the robins and bluebirds did make remarks, it was in their own language.

Sol couldn't answer the question satisfactorily, but he went to bed and dreamed all night of the little Diogenes in her calico frock.

That week and the next he waited patiently for the first glimpse of that remarkable garment coming around the corner, but in vain. And when, in such a very careless manner, that it was quite remarkable, he wondered, audible, "where that odd little girl lived whom he saw on the eve of his arrival," Aunt Hester answered dryly, "Aways up thereabouts," pointing with her hand. She boarded, she believed, with some queer sort of folks there; though, for that matter, she was queer enough herself. And this was all she had to say on the subject.

The next day Sol took it upon himself to wander up that way, "thereabouts," and was rewarded with a glimpse of the calico frock going through a broken gate; and, following it closely, came up with the wearer as she was about to enter the dilapidated front door, at which piece of impertinence she was so much incensed as to turn very red, while tears actually started to her eyes.

"What do you want?" she asked sharply enough.

"To see you," replied Solomon, who, taken by surprise, could think of nothing but the truth.

"Well, you have seen me—now go."

"But it is a warm day and I am very tired."

"I can't help that. It is not my fault—is it?"

"You might ask me to walk in and sit down, if you were not as hard-hearted as a Huron!"

"This is not my house."

"You would, then, if it were?"

"I don't say that."

"Well, then, I'm thirsty; give me a glass of water."

"There is the well, and an iron cup fastened to it by a chain; you can help yourself."

"You inhospitable little misanthrope."

But she was gone, and the next time he inquired for her Aunt Hester told him with a malicious twinkle in her eye, that she was gone to the city.

Perhaps the good soul had been troubled with visions of a future Mrs. Griggs, and was not altogether displeased that an insurmountable barrier was placed between "that odd Rachael Hart and her nephew Sol, who was a good boy, and didn't know the ways of women."

Be that as it may, her joy was soon turned into mourning, for Solomon received dispatches requiring his immediate presence in the city. At least so he said, for Aunt Hester was immovable in her belief that "that Rachael was somehow at the bottom of it." She even hinted as much to Solomon when he bade her good-bye, but he only laughed and told her to take good care of herself.

After all business could not have been so very pressing, as he spent the greater portion of his time wandering through lanes and back streets, not unfrequently dashing down alleys with the inexplicable exclamation, "That's her!" from whence he always returned very red in the face and sheepish in expression.

* * * * *

Three months had passed away when he nearly ran against a little woman, who looked up in his face with rather a sardonic smile.

"You eyesight is not so good in the city, Mr. Griggs. You don't seem to know me here."

"Rachael!—Miss Hart, I have been looking for you everywhere. I—I where do you live?"

She hesitated a moment, and then said shortly: "Come and see." And turning, led the way through narrow streets, reeking with filth and teeming with a wretched population, up a flight of broken stairs into a dingy little room, whose only redeeming feature was its perfect cleanliness.

"Will you be seated, Mr. Griggs?" she asked with a scornful smile. "Now that you know my residence, I trust to have the pleasure of seeing you frequently."

"And you live in this den?" asked Solomon, heedless of her sarcasm. "How do you support youself?"

"By my needle."

"And how much does it take to keep up this magnificent style of living?"

"By unremitting exertion I can earn $2 a week."

"Great heavens! why didn't you come to me?"

"For two excellent reasons: First, I should not have known where to have found you; secondly, I should not have come if I had."

"Of course not. Your pride is you meat and drink. Still you might have come. We are in want of hands."

"I do not believe it. You wish to deceive me into accepting alms."

"There is our advertisment, read for yourself!" pulling out a paper from his pocket.

The sunken eyes gleamed eagerly; she was human after all, and was even then suffering the pangs of hunger.

"Mr. Griggs, I believe you are a good man," she said, bursting into tears. "I will work for you gladly, for I am nearly starving."

And she did work early and late, in spite of Solomon's entreaties, refusing to accept anything but her wages, declining to receive his visits, sending back his gifts, steadily refusing above all to become his wife, though she had softened wonderfully toward him.

"You are rich, I am poor!" she said in reply to his passionate arguments. "You are handsome, and I am ugly; the world would laugh and your family be justly offended!"

"I have no family, and as for the world let it laugh; I dare be happy in spite of it!"

"I will not have you."

"Do you not love me?"

"I will not have you," and with that answer Solomon was obliged to rest contented.

* * * * *

Time passed on, a financial crisis came, and, with hundreds of others, down went the house of Griggs, Makem & Co.

Solomon sat in his office gloomily brooding over his ruin, gloomily thinking of the woman whose love he had so long and fruitlessly striven to win, darkly wondering if it were not better to cut short an aimless, hopeless, blighted life. In the little drawer on the right lay a brace of pistols, a present from young Makem when he went to California. Solomon took them out; they were loaded; it was but to raise them so, adjust the trigger so, and—

"Lady wants to see you, sir."

"Can't see her. What can a woman want here? Shut the door; if any one calls, say I am out."

Once more he took up the pistols, but they dropped from his nerveless hands, for a pair of arms were around his neck, and two clear gray eyes looked lovingly in his, while the voice that was sweetest to him whispered softly:

"When you were rich I rejected you. Now that you are poor I come to ask if you will take me?"

And Solomon, like a sensible man, put up the pistols and took the "calico frock" instead.—N. Y. Mercury.

But few women are engaged as cooks, except in very small hotels. They are not competent. A woman cook will scarcely ever make one thing twice alike. They take too many chances, trust too much to luck, and in consequence fail repeatedly. They hardly ever prepare their dishes according to any fixed rule as to the weight or measurement of the ingredients. On the contrary they are disposed to lump things: "About a teaspoonful of this, a cupful of that, and when near done stir in a little seasoning." They pay no attention to the size of the teaspoon or the cup, and insert the seasoning when and where it may please their fancy to do so. Now a man cook works quite to the contrary; every ingredient he uses is as accurately measured and weighed as a druggist's prescription, and the mixing and cooking of the same are calculated and timed as carefully as the hours allotted by the doctor for the patient's medicine. Even the purity and character of the goods are inquired into. Nothing is left to chance, and hence there are no failures to be followed by that feminine excuse: "I don't see why it is I should have such luck. I cannot understand it."—A Hotel Keeper.

Now.

Rise! for the day is passing,
And you lie dreaming on;
The others have buckled their armor,
And forth to the fight are gone.

A place in the ranks awaits you,
Each man has some part to play;
The past and the future are nothing,
In the face of the stern to-day.

Rise from your dreams of the future—
Of gaining some hard-fought field;
Of storming some airy fortress,
Or bidding some giant yield.

Your future has deeds of glory,
Of honor, (God grant it may!)
But you arm will never be stronger,
Or the need so great as to-day.

Rise! if the past detains you,
Her sunshine and storms forget;
No chains so unworthy to hold you
As those of a vain regret.

Sad or bright, she is lifeless ever,
Cast her phantom arms away,
Nor look back, save to learn the lesson
Of a nobler strife to-day.

Rise! for the day is passing;
The sound that you scarcely hear
Is the enemy marching to battle;
Arise! for the foe is here!

Stay not to sharpen your weapons,
Or the hour will strike at last,
When, from dreams of a coming battle,
You may awake to find it past!

The true way to "take it easy" in summer is the true way to "take it easy" at all times. It is not to fret, not to worry, not to dwell on the uncomfortable. Talk of something beside the heat; think of something beside the heat. Go on with your usual avocation, at your usual hour, in your usual way. There is nothing in the heat to harm you if your habits are ordinarily prudent and regular. If you can get a vacation, and can afford to take one, take it. It probably won't do you any good, but it won't do you any harm. It will, to be sure, force you to travel, which is the most uncomfortable thing you can do at this season; but if you are strong and healthy, you will probably get through it. The change of water and of food and air at the place where you go to spend your vacation will probably make you sick, but such sicknesses are seldom fatal. You can cure yourself almost at any time by coming home, and when you get home, your increased contentment will well repay you the trouble and suffering of your vacation trip. If you can't have vacation, you will probably be all the better for not having it. Either way, the chances are that, with a little of the right kind of philosophy, you can make the summer seem to be the blessing that it really is, instead of the curse that you try to suppose it.—Buffalo Express.

A resident of the rural districts was visiting Boston for the purpose of seeing the sights. The noon hour found him on Tremont Row gazing into the shop windows as he leisurely passed along. It was approaching the time for the regular noon prayer meeting in the room used for that purpose by the Young Men's Christian Association, and as usual a member of that excellent body was upon the sidewalk inviting the passers-by to enter and participate in the services. As the countryman came and halted by the door, the young man tapped him on the shoulder and said: "Step right up stairs, my friend; you will find a cordial welcome." "No you don't," said Mr. Rusticus, "yer can't play any of yer confidence games on me. I've hearn tell too much about yer fellers to be caught before bein' in the city two hours."—Boston Budget.

A farmer in England, returning home rather late one night, discovered a yokel with a lantern under his kitchen window, who, when asked his business there, said he had only come a-courting.

"Come a what?" asked the farmer.

"A-courting, sir. I'se a courting Mary."

"But what do you want of a lantern?" asked the farmer; "I never used one when I was a young man."

"No sir," was the yokel's reply, "I don't think ye did, judging by the looks of the missis."

"Yes," said Mrs. de Hobson, "Clara had an excellent opportunity to visit Europe last year in company with some friends; but I couldn't bear the idea of having the ocean between us." "It seems a pity, Mrs. Hobson," responded the caller: "a European trip does give such a tone to a society young lady." "I know it does. To those moving in the high circles that we do, it is almost a necessity, I s'pose," concluded Mrs. de Hobson, half regretfully, "that I should have let her went."—Puck.

GOV. AMES has the appointment of a new savings bank commissioner on his hands, Commissioner Curry having tendered his resignation, in order to accept the treasurership of a manufacturing corporation. Mr. Curry has held the office since 1876.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has a commendable stick-to-ativeness. Two years ago he appointed Gen. A. R. Lawton minister to Russia, but withdrew the nomination on account of his political disabilities. Now the latter have been removed, and the president has appointed him minister to Austria.

GRAND ARMY posts have been cautioned from the national headquarters against giving their opinions, as a post, on any subject, without approval from national and department headquarters. The caution comes in consequence of an attempt to poll the posts as to their views on the recent pension veto.

GOV. AMES goes to Westfield to-night, the guest of the wheelmen's association, and will be accompanied by his staff. Ex-Gov. Robinson, Senator Dawes and Congressmen Rockwell and Whiting will also be present, and the occasion is expected to be one of the notable social events of the season in this part of the state.

NOTHING has yet been developed in the Beverly investigation which reflects upon the integrity of any member of the Legislature, but the fact that $15,000 has been expended to help on the division of the town, without any sort of an account being kept to show how the money has been spent, shows that there must have been an unconscionable amount of lobbying, to say the least. The Legislature ought to kick the lobby out of the state house, for its own self-respect.

THERE is a revolt against the Knights of Labor among the New York shoemakers, on account of the unreasonable dictation of Master Workman Quinn, of district assembly 49, and some 6000 members of the craft will probably withdraw from the order. "I do not propose that my little ones, like those of the 'longshoremen, shall be reduced to want to please the loafers in the Knights of Labor," said one of the men,—a sentiment that will be echoed in the heart of many a Knight who is ordered to throw up his job to suit the whim of some official who knows nothing, and cares less, about his condition.

OUR Republican senators and representatives at Washington were entertained at Boston last Saturday by the Massachusetts Club, and there were a number of good speeches in the interests of harmony and organized work in the party, in order to insure success in the next campaigns, state and national. But harmony and organization are not the only things necessary to insure success. It must have principles and a policy which shall commend themselves to the people, and then live up to them. A declaration in the party platform, for instance, in favor of constitutional prohibition, which a Republican Legislature quietly ignores, is not the kind of fealty to principle which is calculated to inspire confidence in the hearts of voters.

THE interstate commerce law is more far-reaching in its effects than ever entered into the heads of its originators, probably, and the interstate commission has had nothing to do as yet but consider the applications pouring in from one end of the land to the other for relief of its operations. Representatives of Boston business interests appeared before the commission Wednesday to plead for relief, in order to save her large export trade, which has grown up under an arrangement by which traffic has been brought to the Hub at the same rate as to New York. This export trade, it is claimed, will be lost if the provisions of the new law are enforced. California lumber, wool, and fruit interests are all protesting vigorously against the law. The raisin crop of that state, which has doubled within a year, and promised to double again under favorable transportation rates to the East, must now labor under the serious disadvantage of a freight rate of seventy cents a box to New York, while Spanish raisins are brought for five cents. The grain growing regions of the Northwest will be similarly affected. The effects of the law on industries nearer home may be seen in the case of the Davis company, which has been employing 300 men in their sulphur ore mine at Rowe, giving a great impetus to the village. The new law has advanced freight rates 40 per cent, 100 men have been discharged, and it is said the company will have to shut down entirely unless the old freight rates are restored. It is of course too early to pronounce final judgment upon the law and its workings, but it must be conceded that it is developing many unpleasant features.

A destructive cyclone visited portions of Ohio and West Virginia last Friday, and at St. Clairsville and Martins Ferry hundreds of houses were destroyed or damaged, many people more or less injured, and a great amount of damage done, the aggregate loss being estimated at $1,000,000 or more.

Chief Justice David K. Carter, of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, died last Saturday, aged 74. He was an intimate friend of President Lincoln, who appointed him to his office.

Lieut. Danenhower, one of the survivors of the Jeannette expedition, committed suicide at the Annapolis naval academy Tuesday night.

The Cocheco print works at Dover, N. H., were burned last Friday, loss $200,000.

Who or what is the Palmer Electric Light Company? Has it a definite organization? Has it a charter? How much of its stock has been taken in this village? These are a few of the questions asked by voters in the fire district, and subjects on which they would like enlightenment.

At the annual meeting of the Congregational society yesterday afternoon, David Knox was chosen clerk, F. D. Barton treasurer, J. N. Lacey, G. F. Brown and Wilson Lawrence prudential committee, J. N. Lacey, L. E. Moore and C. A. Brown a committee on heating. The appropriations were nearly $2800.

Monday was a decided change from the spring-like weather of the week before. A snow storm set in about the middle of the forenoon and continued all day, ending in a regular northeaster toward night, and covering the ground with about six inches of snow. Several sleighs appeared Tuesday morning, but were soon put up again, and by Wednesday noon the dust was flying in the streets.

Louis Duprez paid the district court $5 50 last Saturday for an assault. John Farrell and Elexus Waid paid $10.80 and $6.48 for drunkenness, and for vagrancy Thomas Griffin and Charles Martin were sent up for three months. Monday Patrick O'Brien was committed in default of $7.92 for drunkenness. Tuesday John Nolan, for a third offense of drunkenness was sent up for two months, and Michael Leishman was committed in default of $7.67.

The insurance adjusters have settled the loss on the depot, paying $22,000, and work was commenced on the repairing of the building yesterday, the Boston and Albany road doing the job with its own workmen, a large force being put on. The burned portion of the building has been fenced off by a fence along the center of the platform, preventing spectators from approaching too close, and the liability of injury from timbers, etc.

A special town meeting has been called for May 2d. There are seven articles in the warrant, the principal ones relating to the building of a new high school house and raising money for the same. These articles were originally in the warrant for the annual meeting, but were withdrawn with the understanding that a soldiers' memorial was to be asked for this year, and the school house matter was to be left until another year. The voters recognize the need of a new high school building, but as $5000 was appropriated for the memorial fund and the taxes will already be much heavier than last year, many of the property holders who would otherwise be in favor of, are now decidedly against the erection of a new school building this year, and think this attempt to force them to build it rather a breach of faith.

The committee on a soldiers' memorial, appointed by the town, has organized with H. E. W. Clark chairman and O. B. Smith secretary, and they will probably report at the special town meeting May 2d. The general opinion seems to be that the building should be located in Palmer, but that the citizens of that village should provide a site free of expense to the town. But now another item presents itself. The town sadly needs a new town house and offices for its officers, and will be compelled to build one before long. It is now proposed that instead of putting $15,000 into a memorial building alone, the town build a memorial town hall, with a hall for public amusements, rooms for the Grand Army and library, and offices for the selectmen, etc. The plan is one which thoughtful voters will do well to consider.

THE ATHLETIC TOURNAMENT.

A large number attended the athletic contests at the rink last Saturday evening, and a good deal of interest was manifested in the several events, the outlying towns being well represented. The wrestling match had for entries C. W. Hewson of Springfield, J. J. Connors of Holyoke, Cornelius Sullivan of Monson, J. F. Donovan of Ludlow, John Sullivan of North Wilbraham, Sullivan of Monson winning the medal and championship. The Wilbraham team won the tug of war, two out of three pulls. In the half-mile go-as-you-please race, Alfred Cowles of Palmer came in first in 2.10½, closely followed by James Dunn of Wilbraham. P. J. Murphy of North Wilbraham won the 880-yards dash in 1.45 2–5. The 200-yards dash for men over 40 and boys under 11 was taken by Frank Cook of Palmer, a lad of less than 11. P. J. Murphy's attempt to run four times around the rink in less than 48 seconds, proved successful, his time being 43½. The best previous time was 45 1–5. A good deal of money changed hands, and considerable wrangling took place. The Palmer Orchestra furnished music.

The school committee met last week and organized with Rev. Mr. Darling chairman, and Dr. Charles Deland secretary. Mr. Hitchings, teacher of the first grammar school, is to fit up a natural history room in the high school building.

A special town meeting is called for Saturday, the 30th, to choose an assessor to take the place of Stephen B. Richardson, who declines further service. Also to choose a board of health, and to see about remodeling and repairing the West Warren lock-up. There is an article in the warrant in regard to the employment of a night watch, and the question of paying him out of the fund appropriated for the suppression of crime, also to see if the town will rescind the vote by which it instructed the selectmen to expend the $1600 for the suppression of crime, and leave the same in the hands of a committee or agent.

SAFE BREAKERS AND BURGLARS.

Between 1 and 2 o'clock last Friday morning the safe in the Boston and Albany Railroad depot was blown open, and about $40 in money rewarded the cracksmen for their trouble. An entrance was effected through a window in the men's waiting room, and the door of the ticket office was then forced open. Holes were drilled in the safe door just below the combination, powder inserted, and the door blown off. Several people heard the explosion, but thought nothing about it until morning, and there is no clue to the ones who did it.

Rockwood's store was again broken into last Saturday night, the work being done without disturbing the burglar alarms. The job was evidently done by tramps who were short of clothing, two full suits and some other small articles being taken, to the amount of $100.

LUDLOW.

The Memorial Day Association met Thursday evening and made further preparations for the day. The town has appropriated $100 for the occasion.

John W. Dickinson, secretary of the state board of education, visited Ludlow to-day to attempt to create peace between the two opposing fractions in school matters.

A BAD FIRE.

About 2 o'clock last Saturday morning fire was discovered in a large jute shed of the Ludlow Manufacturing Co., standing near the old wooden mills of the corporation The town has no fire department, and the flames soon spread to the ell of the building, and then to the main part, a two and a half story structure, which has not been run for some years, and was used as a storehouse, containing a large amount of lumber, hemp, burlap, paper, etc., besides machinery and supplies for the mills. Another ell of the building was also burned, and the fire then spread to a small building in the pasture used for storing lime, destroying it and several piles of lumber. The fire was the severest Ludlow has ever known. The jute shed was 250 by 30 feet, 20 feet high, and was partially filled with jute butts, a good deal of which was destroyed, and the rest damaged by fire and water. The main building was 100 by 60 feet, with two ells, one two and a half stories, the other of brick. The fire was seen for miles, and but for a light rain and the absence of wind, much other damage would have been done by the showers of sparks. Joseph Twombly was slightly hurt by falling bales of jute, and another man was hit by a falling beam.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CONFERENCE.

The semi-annual meeting of the Hampden Conference of Congregational churches was attended Wednesday by about 300 people, Rev. Dr. Burnham of Springfield presiding, and Rev. R. C. Bell of East Longmeadow acting as scribe. Eighteen churches made oral reports through delegates, and Rev. R. E. Knight of West Springfield read a written report of the work done by the churches in 1886, which showed that while there had been no marked revivals, a quiet, steady growth was perceptible. In the 34 churches reporting there had been 437 additions by profession of faith, and 270 by letter, the removals aggregating 378 from different causes, making the net gain 317. The total amount given to charities for the year was $34,913, the current expenses being $89,983. A discussion on "The place and work of young people in the churches", was led by Rev. H. W. Pope of Palmer and M. S. Dudley of North Wilbraham, after which a bountiful collation was served. After dinner Rev. Dr. Reed and Rev. Henry Hyde of Holyoke opened a discussion on "The responsibility of the individual, to make use of the religious privileges afforded in our communities," which was participated in by Revs. Byington of Monson, Chase of Hampden, Hurlburt and Knight of West Springfield, Bell of Longmeadow and Dickey of Ludlow. Dea. Sessions, 86 years old, offered prayer, and Rev. C. S. Beardsley of West Springfield made an earnest address on "The work of the church on securing a more manifest power of the spirit of God upon our communities," Rev. Mr. Day of Ludlow Mills and Rev. Contractors Stewart and Harvey have the frame of Geo. L. Keeney's house on Pease avenue inclosed, and are driving the work with their usual go-ahead-ativeness.

A ball will be given by the employes of Fay, Peck & Co's. straw shop, at Memorial Hall, May 6th. Music by McDonald and Kies' orchestra of Worcester, W. G. Ryan prompter.

Jesse Pierce, who has become somewhat notorious in the Beverly Farms case at the state house, will be remembered as keeping a shoe store in Barton's Block some four years ago.

Druggist Chapin, aid-de-camp on the staff of Department Commander Nash, attended the grand camp fire in Boston Tuesday evening, at which four thousand veterans were present.

The Willing Workers have reorganized and elected the following officers: President, Miss Minnie M. Noble; vice president, Miss Alice Brockbank; secretary and treasurer, Miss Letha Potter.

H. Chapin has been re-appointed to act as agent for the school committee in purchasing books and supplies for another year, he having acted as their agent since the free text book law was passed.

Just think of it! A fire department! A. A. Gage, chief engineer; F. C. Park, foreman engine company No. 1; J. K. Thompson, foreman engine company No. 2; as chosen at the adjourned meeting.

The Monson Cornet Band has been reorganized with these officers: President, Nicholas Cantwell; secretary and treasurer, M. A. Marr; leader and musical director, Fayette Thompson; assistant director, N. Cantwell.

The Linophilian society of the academy will commence holding regular meetings Wednesday, May 6th. The following have been elected officers: President, C. S. Craik; vice-president, D. G. Reilly; secretary, P. M. Shea; treasurer, E. L. Morris.

George W. Burdick has an army of painters embellishing, decorating and greatly improving his buildings. The artistic display of painting in colors is particularly noticeable, and favorable comment is made on the neat and tasty method of combining skill and labor in producing noteworthy results.

The people's market met with quite a loss on Wednesday, the "Jumbo" of the alligator family recently received, having breathed for the last time. Letters, the barber, has embalmed the remains, and will place it among his many curiosities.

W. N. Flynt arrived home last Saturday from a trip to Augusta, Ga., on business relative to a marble quarry, and reports quite a contrast between the asparagus, strawberries, green peas, etc., of the South and the eight inches of snow hereabouts on Monday.

At the adjourned town meeting on Monday, C. L. Peck resigned as overseer of the poor, and Alanson N. Chaffee was chosen constable, and Charles Hathaway as prosecuting committee on illegal sales of liquors; the town reconsidered the vote of the former meeting ordering the school committee to take the Sabin property on Main street for school house purposes; it was voted to appropriate $1600 for two chemical engines and other fire apparatus, also $500 was appropriated for drainage of surface water on Hampden avenue, $1 000 for building a barn at the town farm, and $700 for electric lights on condition that $400 is subscribed by citizens; the motion to build a school house on State street was lost, the vote standing 11 for, to 12 against. The total appropriations of the town are $24,250.

WARE AND VICINITY.

E. E. Cleveland has bought the picture framing business of J. C. Dexter.

Caryl Brothers have commenced the manufacture of the "Standard Nerve Food," which is said to be equal if not superior to the celebrated "Moxie."

Work is getting lively on the Central Mass. Railroad. With a large gang of men and steam shovels, it is expected cars will be running to Ware in about six weeks.

Rev. James Boyle of St. Williams Catholic church addressed his large congregation last Sunday forenoon, unfolding to them his plans for building a new church on land recently purchased between Bank and North streets. It is proposed to build the church of brick with brown stone trimmings, with a seating capacity for 1200 people, to be, when completed, the finest church in town. The proposed site of the church is one of the finest in the village, and centrally located.

Rev. W. G. Tuttle preached his farewell sermon to an interested congregation last Sunday, quite a delegation going up from this place. His text was "Finally, brethren, farewell." After giving counsel befitting the occasion, he alluded to the uniform kindness of his parishoners to himself and family during his long and happy pastorate, and expressed a strong attachment to them. He also referred in grateful terms to the repeated liberal donations he had received from his numerous friends of the East Congregational church, and the timely aid they had rendered his church and society. Mr. Tuttle has moved to Worcester, but has been invited to supply the pulpit at Ware Center until a candidate for settlement can be found.

RESOLVED and VOTED, That the heartfelt thanks of this circle be extended to Henry F. Trask, Esq., Springfield, the choir of St. Paul's church of Palmer, and Miss Barnes of Brookfield, for their liberal service and the great pleasure they conferred on many lovers of music, at their recent concert in Central Hall. LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, April 20th, 1887.

The banking committee has reported that it is inexpedient to allow savings banks to invest in real estate mortgages in any New England state, or to invest in any securities not now authorized by law.

A resolve was reported from the financial committee on Thursday to appropriate $5000 for the use of the topographical survey commission in fixing by triangulation the boundaries of cities and towns of the state.

An adverse report upon increasing the salaries of the legislators has been made by the committee on public service, but Senator Jones of Essex and Mr. Upham of Salem dissent.

On Thursday the House finally acted upon the employers' liability bill. A fit of reconsideration was on it, and they threw out all the amendments adopted on a previous stage, except one, that the employe must be in the exercise of due care and diligence. Messrs. Noyes of Gardner and Post of Lenox were opposed to the bill as a whole, but their speeches did not carry the day. The vote on engrossing the bill was 117 to 55.

By a vote of 83 to 74 the House admitted the substitute bill to allow unvaccinated children to attend the public schools, if vaccination would imperil their health, but it was ruled out to-day.

The House has engrossed the Cape Cod canal bill without opposition.

The pharmacy bill has been reconsidered and recommitted to the health committee.

Nothing of account by way of debate occurred in either branch Friday, but some important bills were reported. First of these stands the high license liquor bill. It fixes the minimum of license fees as follows: 1st class, $1000; 2d and 3d, $250; 4th, $500; 5th, $150 (except that brewers are to pay $400); 6th, $1. The last, or druggists' fee, is not changed. Senator Alger of Middlesex and Representatives Felch of Newburyport and Atwood of Boston dissent.

A bill from the committee on towns requires the check list to be used in town meetings on all motions involving the expenditure of money, when a request to that effect is made by one-third of the voters present.

The committee on election laws has reported against making election day a legal holiday, but Senator Shea of Suffolk and Representatives McDonough of Boston, Lang of Reading and Niles of Lynn dissent. Another bill from the same committee requires all legal voters in a town to be registered as a condition of voting.

An important labor bill has been presented to allow the incorporation of labor organizations to act upon the relations of employers to employes, of employers to each other and employes to each other. While pursuing the objects of their incorporation the corporators are to be exempt from conspiracy laws.

A bill from the committee on roads and bridges gives superintendents of streets (who must be appointed in every town) power over streets, sidewalks, trees, sewers and drains, the last two if not otherwise provided for.

This week has been unusually busy, and for the reporters, at least, there has been a heavy pressure. On Tuesday the House began forenoon sessions. Some ten or a dozen committee sessions occur daily. The Senate Beverly investigating committee began Monday forenoon, and has held forenoon and afternoon sessions every day. Wednesday evening the House Beverly committee began its investigation into the alleged corruption. Regular afternoon sessions of both branches are held as usual, of course. The sensation of the week has been the Beverly hearing. The first day drew out the basis of the changes regarding Senator Slattery, that he had been offered money for his vote. It appeared that Slattery and and Michael F. Maher had arranged together to "show up" bribery, if there was any. Jesse Pierce, one of the Beverly divisionists, gave $100 to Maher to give to Slattery. Maher says it was for Slattery's vote. Pierce says it was for Maher's services as a lobbyist and not for Slattery's vote, for he supposed Slattery favorable to the bill. It was further testified that Representative Lally of Milford had been offered by Pierce $400 as a retainer and $50 as a present, if he would use his influence on Slattery. Pierce has engaged ex-Gov. Gaston and Lewis S. Dobney as counsel, and their apparent attempt is to show that Slattery and Maher made a conspiracy to tempt Pierce to commit a crime, which he did not commit.

One notable development of the investigation has been the large amount of money that was raised to carry the division. The summer resident people (living in Boston winters) appear to have raised $18,000, of which $3000 is unspent, to put the bill through, and to have spent it liberally. Thomas J. Marsh, Jr., testified that he was paid $550 for his services in looking after the matter at the State House. George H. Fernald of Worcester was promised $600 for similar services. The lawyers have kept their fees from the public, though they have shown them to the committee, but at the above rate of liberal, even lavish handing out of money, it would not take long to go through $15,000 and not leave any as a corruption fund. The lie, thus far, is between Maher and Pierce, and it remains to be shown where the truth is.

The fight over the Senate bill to change the milk inspection law resulted in the House on Monday in the defeat of the measure by an overwhelming vote. Able speeches were made on both sides and the milk dealers (whom some regarded as milk adulterators) had the support of both Messrs. Taft of Palmer and Darling of Somerville. But their chief opponent was Whittemore Rowell of Boston, of the great milk firm of Brigham, Rowell & Co., and the farmers supported so well his arguments for pure milk and a fair standard that they were irresistible.

The Senate on Tuesday postponed the Sunday bill for one week. Attempts will be made to make it more strict than the House left it.

A warm debate occured Tuesday over the bill to change the state arbitration law. It was opposed as severe on the manufacturers by allowing changes to be made against them by unknown accusers, and by requiring the details of their business to be made public. On the other hand, it was asserted that no more was put into the bill than was necessary to protect the employes. Finally, on Wednesday, the bill was assigned to two o'clock next week Wednesday afternoon.

On Wednesday the House had, for the first time in the history of the state, a debate on high license. In the course of it Mr. Darling of Somerville gave figures showing that the liquor trade laid $5.400,000 of direct money taxes upon the people every year to pay for the consequences of drink in way of courts, police, jails and so on. His argument was that the business should pay what it costs the state in taxes, whereas it now pays only $1.173,000 in license fees. By 108 to 89 the House ordered the bill to a third reading.

The same afternoon, by 13 to 14, President Boardman voting no, the Senate defeated the House bill to limit liquor licenses to one for every 500 people.

"Oh, love! what is it in this world of ours that makes people suffer so with neuralgia." "Can't tell, my pet, unless the average citizen hasn't got sense enough to buy a bottle of Salvation Oil."

Seek no further. Try Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

It seems that the Broadhurst Bros. (Morse's Shoe Store), Main street, Springfield, are now getting more than the "Lion's Share" of the shoe business. They have always had a big trade, and it must be their men's $2.00 real calf shoe for country wear, and old ladies' easy house boots which sell so fast at $2.25 a pair have had something to do toward this large increase in their sales.

FREE TRADE.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from proprietary medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for dyspepsia and liver complaint, and the German syrup for cough and lung troubles, have perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10 cents remain the same size. 47eow

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN, ss. To GEO. W. ELY, Constable of the Town of Palmer, greeting.

In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, you are hereby directed to notify and warn all the inhabitants of the Town of Palmer qualified to vote in Town affairs, to meet at the Town House, in said Palmer, on Monday, the second day of May, next, at ten o'clock a. m., to act on the following articles, viz:

ARTICLE 1. To choose a moderator to preside at said meeting.

ART. 2. To see if the Town will purchase a suitable tract of land, and erect a High School Building.

ART. 3. To raise such sums of money as may be necessary to purchase land and to erect a High School Building, and appropriate the same.

ART. 4. To see if the town will authorize its Treasurer to borrow money in anticipation of the taxes of the current year, and the year next ensuing, the same to be paid from said taxes.

ART. 5. To choose all necessary committees and give them instructions.

ART. 6. To hear reports of committees and act thereon.

ART. 7. To see if the town will accept the provisions of Sections 1, 2, 3 and 4 of Chapter 309 of the Laws of 1885, relating to groves to be used for picnics and other lawful amusements.

And you are hereby directed to serve this warrant by posting up attested copies thereof, at the different public places designated by the vote of the town, seven days, at least, before the holding of said meeting, and cause this warrant to be printed in the Palmer Journal, at least, two issues before the holding of said meeting.

Hereof fail not, and make due return of this warrant with your doings thereon to the Town Clerk, on or before the holding of said meeting.

ASSESSORS' NOTICE!

To the Inhabitants and other Persons Liable to pay Taxes in the Town of Palmer for the year 1887:

The Assessors of the Town of Palmer hereby give notice to the inhabitants of said Town, and all other persons liable to pay taxes therein, that they will receive at the Town House on the second day of May next, the valuation of estates, and all persons liable to be taxed in said Town are hereby notified to bring in to us true and perfect lists of all Polls (males twenty years old and upwards), and schedules and estimates of the Personal and Real Estates for which they are liable to pay taxes in said Town, possessed by them on the first day of May next.

Mortgaged Real Estate.

Any Mortgagor or Mortgagee of Real Estate situated within this Town may bring in to the undersigned Assessors, within the time above specified, a statement under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such Real Estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest as a Mortgagor or Mortgagee therein. When only a part of the property described in any mortgage is situated within this town, an estimate of the amount of the Mortgagee's interest in such part; or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the Mortgagee's interest in each estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement.—[Chap. 175 of the Acts of 1882.

CHAPTER ELEVEN OF THE PUBLIC STATUTES.

SECTION 14. "When any person has an interest in taxable real estate, as holder of a duly recorded mortgage, given to secure the payment of money, the amount of which is fixed and certain, the amount of his interest as mortgagee shall be assessed as real estate in the place where the land lies; and the mortgagor shall be assessed only for the value of said real estate after deducting the assessed value of all such mortgagee's interests therein. When such property is situated in two or more places, the amount of the mortgagee's interest to be assessed in each place shall be proportioned to the assessed value in the respective places of the mortgaged real estate, deducting therefrom the taxable amount of prior mortgages if any thereon."

SECTION 15. "If any holder of such a mortgage fails to file in the Assessors' office a statement under oath of all his estate liable to taxation under the preceeding section, including a statement of the full amount remaining unpaid upon such mortgage and of his interest therein, the amount stated in the mortgage shall be conclusive as to the extent of such interest; but the mortgagee's interest in such real estate shall not be assessed at a greater sum than the fair cash valuation of the land and the structures thereon or affixed thereto; and the amount of a mortgage interest in an estate that has been divided after the creation of such mortgage shall not be required to be apportioned upon the several parts of such estate, except as provided in sections eighty-one to eigty-three inclusive."

SECTION 16. "Mortgagors and Mortgagees referred to in the two preceeding sections, shall for the purpose of taxation, be deemed joint owners until the mortgagee takes possession; and until such possession is taken by the first mortgagee, the Assessors or the collector of taxes, upon application to any one of them, shall give to any such Mortgagee or Mortgagor a tax bill showing the whole tax on the mortgaged estate and the amount included in the valuation thereof as the interest of each Mortgagee and of the Mortgagor respectively. If the first Mortgagee is in possession, he shall be deemed sole owner; and any other Mortgagee in possession shall be deemed joint owner with prior mortgagees."

When a statement in conformity to the law above quoted is brought in, the Real Estate therein returned will be assessed under Sections 14, 15 and 16 of Chap. eleven of Public Statutes. But in cases where the Mortgagor of the Real Estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, no statement or return is required from either Mortgagee or Mortgagor unless requested by the Assessors in writing.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, HAMPDEN, ss. PROBATE COURT.—To the next of kin, and all persons interested in the estate of Martha E. Wardwell, Richard Wardwell, Lucy J. Wardwell and Bertha M. Wardwell, all of Stafford in the state of Connecticut, Minors, Greeting:

Whereas, Ida L. Root (formerly Ida L. Wardwell), foreign Guardian of said minors, has presented to said court her petition praying for license to sell at private sale, certain real estate, therein specified, of her said wards, for investment, and that no further bond may be required than the one she has already given in said state of Connecticut.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the first Wednesday of May, next, at nine o'clock before noon, to show cause, if any you have, against granting the same.

And said petitioner is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week, for three successive weeks, in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper published at Palmer, the last publication to be two days, at least, before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this thirteenth day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven.
3w3 SAMUEL B. SPOONER, Register.

BY LICENSE of the Probate Court for the county of Hampshire, the subscriber, administrator of the estate of Moses Ayres, late of Ware, in said county, deceased, will sell at public auction, on the premises, on Wednesday, the twenty-seventh (27) day of April, current, at 10 o'clock a. m., the dwelling house property lately occupied by said Moses Ayres, consisting of a lot of land of about 11,900 feet, with a three-tenement house and two barns thereon, situated on High street in said Ware. Also will be sold a lot of household furniture. Terms at sale.

The Stepmother.

First she come to our home,
  Tommy run an' hid,
An' Emily an' Bob an' me
  We cried just like we did
When mother died—an' we all said
'At we all wished 'at we was dead.

An' nurse she couldn't stop us,
  An' pa he tried an' tried;
We sobbed an' shook, an' wouldn't look,
  But only cried and cried!
An' then some one—we couldn't jus'
Guess who—was cryin' same as us.

Our stepmother! Yes, it was her,
  Her arms round us all—
For Tommy slid down the banisters
  An' peeked in from the hall!
An' we all love her, too, because
She's purty nigh as good as mother was.

If anything clogs the waste-pipes in the house, we become alarmed, for sewer-gas is apt to generate disease. The children, then, are removed to their grand-parents', or kept out-of-doors as much as possible, until the defect is remedied. But the waste-pipes of the human system are often allowed to clog, and the sufferer who cannot get away becomes unfit for work or pleasure. In such cases Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets" will gently remove the cause, and the effect will vanish of itself. By druggists.

THE PROFITS OF THE SALOON.

There are few men, we imagine, that patronize the saloon, who have any idea of the exorbitant rates which they pay for their liquors. Should the dealers in bread and meat and clothing attempt to charge in the same ratio, there would be a revolt against their extortion not only, but there would hardly be one man in a hundred who could afford the necessaries of life for himself and his family. We insist that what we eat and wear shall be cheap, but consent to pay enormously dear for our drink. Our grocer and tailor and shoemaker must figure their profits to the lowest fraction, but the man who pours out our beer and whisky may fix his profits at two or three hundred per cent. Nobody pays so outrageously for his supplies as the drinker, but he is either unconscious of the robbery, or else he does not care for it.

A little light on this subject may be wholesome for all our readers, and in particular it will unable the drinkers to see, if they will, how dearly they are paying for the whistle. We know of no lambs so easily caught and so closely shorn as are these pets of the saloon.

We ask the beer drinkers to look at these figures: A barrel of beer contains 36 gallons, and costs at the brewery seven dollars. In 36 gallons there are 288 pints, which retail over the counter at ten cents a pint. At this rate the barrel would retail at $28.80. Subtracting first cost,—$7— it leaves a clear profit to the saloon keeper of $21.80 per barrel, which would be at the rate of 311 per cent profit. In other words the liquor, which costs the saloon keeper about 1½ cents a pint, he sells for 10 cents, or a profit of 7½ cents a glass and there are scores, and hundreds, and thousands who will pay at this rate, and perjure themselves to defend the man who is guilty of the swindle.

The whisky drinkers are not sponged quite so badly, but it is bad enough as we will see:—A barrel of whisky contains 40 gallons, and $2 per gallon, would cost $80. In 40 gallons there are 160 quarts. In each quart there is an average of 15 drinks, and each drink is sold for 10 cents. At that rate a quart would sell for $1.60, and a gallon for $6.40, and, of course, 40 gallons for $256. Deducting the first cost,—$80,—it leaves a net profit on a barrel of whisky of $176, which would be at the rate of 220 per cent profit on his sales. It has been well said: No wonder so many men go into a business where so little capital is required, and where the profits are so enormous. On the other hand, is it not a wonder that such multitudes of men can be found who are willing to pay for their drink at the ruinous and almost fabulous rate? The glass of beer is really worth 2½ cents, and they pay for it 10 cents. The glass of whisky is worth but 4 cents, and they pay 10 cents for it. If they must drink, why do they patronize the saloons and pay twice or thrice the value of the drink? In other matters they calculate cost and profit carefully enough. They would not pay the grocer three times as much as his goods cost him, especially when they could get the goods at first hand for a third of what they demand. Only in a matter of drink do man lose their headsand seem unable to reason clearly, or toact wisely.

He would be a very moderate beer drinker who should drink only three glasses per day. And yet at this rate, at 10 cents a glass, his beer would cost him $109.50 per year. But if he merely paid for the cost of the beer, at the rate of 2½ cents per glass, his beer bill for the year would be only $23.72. Here is the difference of $85.78, which he pays as a clear profit to the saloon keeper for simply handling the grog It is not strange, again, that men take to this business of selling liquor when their costomers are willing to pay for their goods two or three times their original cost. But one asks, instinctively, what kind of men are these who are willing to take from their customers three times as much as the articles cost them? And is it not strange that the seller and the drinker are such sworn friends that the one is ready to swindle and the other to be swindled at sight?

Of course, we do not believe in the drink any more than we do in the saloon. But, if a man will drink, what does he want to pay another man 300 per cent, profit to supply him with liquor for? He can get his grog at first hands and save this enormous tariff, if he will,—why does he not do it, and let the grog-shop alone? The grog-shop is a curse to him and to the commuity in which he is located. If he, and others like him, would keep away from it, it would die for want of support, He can pay three times as much as poor liquors are worth, and eat the odds and ends of the market, and wear cheap clothes, live in cheap houses, and be a cipher or a curse in the community besides. "He pays his money, let him take his choice."—Watertown Enterprise.

A deacon of a Southern church, the pulpit of which was vacant, recently wrote to a prominent clergyman of his denomination, asking him to recommend a pastor. "We want a man," said the deacon, without at all realizing how the sentence would sound, "we want a man who is a true Southerner and full of the Holy Ghost. The first qualification is absolutely imperative."—Scranton Truth.

A bad boy in a Massachusetts village surprised and pleased his teacher by promising to contribute a fine steel engraving of Washington to aid in decorating the school room on Feb. 22. The teacher left a large space among the evergreen trimmings on the wall. And the boy brought a two cent postage stamp.—Stray.

Old party (in restaurant)—'Bout ten years ago, waiter, I was in here and got a piece of steak that was as good as enny I ever eat. Waiter—Yes, sah. Old party—Now you kin bring me another one jest like it, only don't have it quite so well done.—Harper's Bazar.

"The only possible objection that can be found in the house," said the landlord, after showing all the apartments, "is the absence of a bathroom." "That doesn't make any difference at all," replied the would-be tenant; "we are anarchists."—Harper's Bazar.

The gas meter is a fraud, but there is nothing low about it.—Philadelphia Call.

A Good Appetite

Is essential to good health; and at this season it is often lost, owing to the poverty or impurity of the blood, and the weakening effect of the changing season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful medicine for creating an appetite, toning the digestion, and giving strength to the whole system.

"When I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I was dizzy in the morning, had a headache, and no appetite; but now I can hardly get enough cooked to eat." EMMA SHEPARD, 1 Coral street, Worcester, Mass.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for dyspepsia, which I have had for the last nine or ten years, suffering terribly. It has now entirely cured me." Mrs. A. NORTON, Chicopee, Mass.

"I must say Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I ever used. Last spring I had no appetite, and the least work I did fatigued me ever so much. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon felt as if I could do as much in a day as I had formerly done in a week. My appetite is voracious." MRS. M. V. BAYARD, Atlantic City, N. J.

R. H. EDDY, Solicitor of Patents.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the MOST CAPABLE AND SUCCESSFUL practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse. CHAS. MASON, Commissioner of Patents."

"Inventors cannot employ a person more trustworthy or more capable of securing for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office. EDMUND BURKE, Late Commissioner of Patents."

BOSTON, October 19, 1870.

R. H. EDDY, Esq.—Dear Sir: You procured for me, in 1840, my first patent. Since then you have acted for me and advised me in hundreds of cases, and procured many patents, re-issues and extensions. I have occasionally employed the best agencies in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but I still give you almost the whole of my business, in your line, and advise others to employ you. Yours truly, GEORGE DRAPER.

Solid Truths Worth Knowing.

Dyspepsia

Is the national disease of this country; it lies at the root, and we may say is the parent, of a majority of cases of fatal, wasting, chronic disorders. In the great scientific triumph achieved by Dr. R. C. Flower in that greatest of all discoveries of this age, his Liver and Stomach Sanative, the suffering world has placed within its reach a speedy,

Absolute and Never Failing Cure

For dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, heart burn, mal-assimilation, water brash, acid stomach, etc., also A SPECIFIC REMEDY, that instantly overcomes a torpid or inactive condition of the liver, thus curing in an incredible short time all diseases arising from a diseased liver. It is also the

FINEST INVIGORATING TONIC

for the general system ever discovered. Its action is threefold; it tones and invigorates the stomach, stimulates the liver to a healthy action, and vitalizes and strengthens the system. It is immeasurably superior to any other preparation known to man, It has cured tens of thousands of cases said to be incurable. Price only $1. With every bottle is given free a bottle of Dr. Flower's elegant sugar-coated liver pills. For sale by all druggists.

A Lesson to Lovers.

She, with a milk pail on her arm,
Turns aside with her young cheeks glowing,
And sees down the lane the slow, dull tread
Of the drove of cows that are homeward going.
"Bessie," he said. At the sound she turned,
Her blue eyes full of childish wonder.
"My mother is feeble and lame and old—
I need a wife at my farmhouse yonder.

"My heart is lonely, my home is drear,
I need your presence ever near me;
Will you be my guardian angel, dear,
Queen of my household, to guide and cheer me?"

"It hath a pleasant sound," she said;
"A household queen, a guiding spirit,
To warm your heart and cheer your home
And keep the sunshine ever near it,
But I am only a simple child,
So my mother says in her daily chiding,
And what must a guardian angel do
When she first begins her work of guiding?"

"Well first, dear Bessie, a smiling face
Is dearer far than the rarest beauty,
And my mother, fretful, lame and old
Will require a daughter's loving duty;
You will see to her flannels, drops and tea,
And talk with her of lungs and liver,
Give her your cheerful service, dear;
'The Lord He loveth a cheerful giver.'

"You will see that my breakfast is piping hot,
And rub the clothes to a snowy whiteness;
Make golden butter and snowy rolls,
And polish things to a shining brightness;
Will darn my stockings and mend my coats,
And see that the buttons are sewed on tightly;
You will keep things cheerful and neat and sweet,
That home's altar fires may still burn brightly.

"You will read me at evening the daily news,
The tedious winter nights beguiling;
And never forget that the sweetest face
Is a cheerful face that is always smiling;
In short, you'll arrange in a general way
For a sort of sublunary heaven,
For home, dear Bessie, say what we may,
Is the highest sphere to a woman given."

The lark sang out to the bending sky,
The bobolink piped in the nodding rushes,
And out of the tossing clover blooms
Came the sweet, clear song of the meadow thrushes;
And Bessie, listening, paused awhile,
Then said, with a sly glance at her neighbor:
"But, John—do you mean—that is to say,
What shall I get for all this labor?

"To be nurse, companion and servant girl;
To make home's altar fires burn brightly;
To wash and iron and scrub and cook,
And always be cheerful, neat and sprightly;
To give up liberty, home and friends,
Nay, even the name of a mother's giving—
To do all this for one's board and clothes—
Why, the life of an angel ain't worth living!"

And Bessie gayly went her way
Down through the fields of scented clover,
But never again since that summer day
Has she won a glance from her rustic lover.
The lark sings out to the bending sky,
The clouds sail on white as ever,
The clovers toss in the summer wind,
But Bessie has lost that chance forever.

THE THREE TRAVELING BAGS.

There were three of them, all of shining black, one on the top of the pile of trunks, one on the ground and one in the owner's hand, all going to Philadelpaia, all waiting to be checked.

The last bell rang. The baggage man bustled, fuming from one pile of baggage to another, dispensing chalk to trunks, checks to the passengers and curses to porters, in approved railway style.

"Mine—Philadelphia!" cried a stout military looking man with enormous whiskers and a red face, crowding forward, as the baggage man laid his hand on the traveling bag.

"Won't you please give me a check for this, now?" entreated a pale, slender, carefully dressed young man, for the ninth time, holding out bag No. 2; "I have a lady to look after."

"Say! be you going to give a check for this or not?" growled the proprietor of bag No. 3 a short pock-marked fellow in a shabby overcoat:

"All right, gentlemen. Here you are," says the functionary, rapidly distributing the checks.

"Philadelphia, this?"

"Yes, sir—1,002—1,740—1,020. All right.

"All aboard!" shouted the conductor. And the train moved slowly out of the station.

The baggage man meditatively watched it as it sped away in the distance, and then, as if a thought had suddenly struck him, slapped his thigh and exclaimed:

"Bless, if I don't believe—"

"What?" required the switchman.

"That I've gone and gave them three last fellows the wrong checks. The cussed little black fellows were all alike and bothered me."

"Telegraph," said the switchman.

"Never you mind," replied the baggageman. "They were all going to Philadelphia. They will find out when they get there."

They did.

The scene shifts to the Continental hotel, Philadelphia. Front parlor, up stairs. Occupants, the young gentleman alluded to as No. 2, and young lady. In accordance with the fast usages of the times, the twain had been made one in matrimony at 7.20 a. m., duly kissed and congratulated till 8.15, put aboard the express at 8.45, and deposited, bag and baggage, at the Continental, at 11.58.

They were seated on the sofa, the black broadcloth coatsleeve encircling the slender waist of the the gray traveling dress, and the jetty moustache in equal affectionate proximity to the glossy curls.

"Are you tired, dearest?"

"No, love, not much. But you are, aren't you?"

"No, darling."

Kiss, and a pause.

"Don't it seem funny?" said the lady.

"What, love?"

"That we should be married."

"Yes, darling."

"Won't they be glad to see us George's?"

"Of course they will."

"I'm sure I shall enjoy it so much. Shall we get there to-night?"

"Yes, love, if—"

Rap, rap, rap, at the door.

A hasty separation took place between man and wife to opposite ends of the sofa; then, "Come in."

"An ye pleaze, sur, it's an M. P. is waiting to see yez."

"To see me—a policeman?"

"Yes, sir."

"There must be some mistake."

"No, sur, it's yourself, and he's waiting in the hall beyant."

"Well, I'll go to—no, tell him to come here."

"Sorry to disturb you, sir," said the M. P., with a large brass star on his breast, appearing with a great alacrity at the waiter's elbow. "I believe this is your black valise?"

"Yes, that is ours certainly. It is Julia's; the lady's things are in it."

"Suspicious circumtances about that valise, sir. Telegraph came this morning that a burglar started on the 8.45 Philadelphia train with a lot of silver spoons in a black valise. Spoons marked T. B. Watched at the ferry. Followed up here. Took a peep inside. Sure enough there's the spoons; marked T. B., too. Said it was yours. Shall have to take you in charge."

"Take me in charge?" echoed the bridegroom. "But I assure you, dear, sir, there is some mistake—it's all a mistake."

"S'pose you'll be able to account for spoons being in your valise, then?"

"Why—I—it isn't mine; it must be somebody else's; somebody has put them in here; it is some villainous conspiracy."

"Hope you'll be able to tell a straight story before the magistrate, young man; because if you don't, you stand a smart chance of being sent up for six months."

"O, Charles! this is horrid. Do send him away! O, dear! I wish I was home," sobbed the little bride.

"I tell you, sir," said the bridegroom, bristling up with indignation, "this is a vile plot. What would I be doing with your paltry spoons? I was married this morning, in Fifth avenue, and I am on my wedding tour. I have high relations in New York. You'll repent if you dare arrest me!"

"O, come, now," said the incredulous official, "I've heard stories like this before. This ain't the first time swindlers have traveled in couples. Do you s'pose I don't know nothing? 'Taint no use; you've just got to come to the station house. Might as well go peaceably, 'cause you'll have to."

"Charles this is perfectly dreadful! Our wedding night in the station house! Do send for somebody. send for the landlord to explain it."

The landlord was sent for and came; the waiters and chambermaids and bar-room loungers came without being sent for, and filled the room and adjoining hall—some to laugh, and some to say wouldn't have believed it, but nearly all to exult that the pair had been "found out." No explanation could be given, and the upshot was, in spite of tears, threats, rage and expostulations, that the unfortunate newly married pair were taken in charge by the relentless police and marched down stairs en route to the police office.

And here let the curtain drop on the melancholy scene while we fellow the fortunes of the black valise No. 2.

When the train stopped at Camden, four gentlemen got off and walked arm in arm, rapidly and silently, up one of the streets, and struck off into a foot-path leading into a secluded grove, outside of the town. Of the first two one was our military friend in a blue coat, apparently the leader of the party. Of the second two, one was carrying a black valise. Their respective companions walked with hasty, irregular strides, were abstracted and appearently ill at ease.

The party stopped.

"This is the place," said Capt. Jones.

"Yes," said Dr. Smith.

The captain and the doctor conferred together. The two other studiously kept apart.

"Very well. I'll measure the ground, and do you place your men."

It was done.

"Now for the pistols." whispered the captain to his fellow-second.

"They are ready in the valise," replied the doctor.

The principals were placed ten paces apart, and wore that decidedly uncomfortable air a man has who is in momentary expectation of being shot dead.

"You will fire, gentlemen, simultaneously, when I give the word," said the captain. Then in an undertone to the doctor:

"Quick, the pistols."

The doctor, stooping over and fumbling at the valise, appeared to discover something which surprised him.

"What is the matter?" asked the captain, striding up. "Can't you find the caps?"

"Deuce a pistol or cap but this."

He held up—a lady's nightcap.

"Look here—and here!" holding up, successively, a hair brush, a long white nightgown, a cologne bottle and a comb.

They were greeted with a long, loud whistle by the captain, and a blank stare by the principals.

"Confound the luck," ejaculated the captain; "if we haven't made a mistake, and brought the wrong valise."

The principals looked at the seconds. The seconds looked at the principals. Nobody volunteered a suggestion.

At last the doctor inquired: "Well, what is to be done?"

"Deuced unlucky!" again ejaculated the captain; "the duel can't go on."

"Evidently not," responded the doctor, "unless they brain each other with the hair brush, or take a pop at each other with the cologne bottle."

"You are quite sure there are no pistols in the valise?" said one of the principals, with suppressed eagerness, and drawing a long breath of evident relief.

"We must go over to the city and get the pistols," proposed the captain.

"And by that time it will be dark," said the doctor.

"Very unlucky!"

"We shall be the laughing stock of the town," consolingly remarked the doctor, "if this gets wind."

"One word with you, doctor," here interposed his principal.

They conferred.

At the end of the conference with his principal, the doctor advanced to the captain and conferred with him. Then the captain conferred with his principal. Then the seconds conferred with each ather.

Finally, it was formally agreed between the contending parties that a statement would be drawn up in writing, whereby principal No. 1 tendered the assurance that the offensive words—"You are a liar"—were not used by him in any personal sense, but solely as an abstract proposition, in a general way, in regard to the matter of fact under dispute. To which principal No. 2 appended his statement of his high gratification at this candid and honorable explanation and unqualifiedly withdrew the offensive words—"You are a scoundrel"—they having been used by him under misapprehension of the intent and purpose of the remark which had preceded them.

There being no longer a cause for quarrel, the duel was of course ended. The principals shook hands, first with each other, next with the seconds, and were evidently very glad to get out of it.

"And now that it is so happily settled," said the doctor, chuckling and rubbing his hands, "it proves to have been a lucky mistake, after all, that we brought the wrong valise. Wonder what the lady who owns it will say when she opens it and sees the pistols?"

"Very well for you laugh about it," growled the captain, "but it's no joke for me to lose my pistols. Hair triggers—best English make, and gold mounted. There ain't a finer pair of shooters in America."

"Oh, we will find them! We will go on a pilgrimage from house to house, asking if any lady there has lost her nightcap and found a pair of duelling pistols."

In very good spirits the party crossed the river, and inquired at the baggage room in reference to each and all black leather traveling bags that arrived that day—took notes of where they were sent, and sent out to follow them up. In due time they reached the Continental, and, as luck would have it, met the unhappy bridal pair just coming down stairs in charge of the detective.

"What's the meaning of all this?" inquired the captain.

"Oh, a couple of burglars caught with a valise of stolen property."

"A valise!—what kind of a valise?"

"A black leather valise. That is it there."

"Here? Stop! Halloo! Police!—Landlord! It's all right! You are all wrong! It's all a mistake. They got changed at the depot. The lady and gentleman are innocent. Here is their valise, with her nightcap in it."

Great was the laughter, multifarious the comments, and deep the interest of the crowd in all their dialogue, which they appeared to regard as a delightful entertainment got up expressly for their amusement.

"Then you say this here thing is yours," said the detective, relaxing his hold upon the bridegroom, and confronting the captain.

"Yes, it's mine."

"And how did you come by those spoons?"

"Spoons, you jackanapes?" said the captain, "duelling pistols."

"Do you call these pistols?" said the policemen, holding up to view one of the silver spoons, marked T. B.

The captain, astonished, gasped, "It is the wrong valise again, after all."

"Stop, not so fast!" said the police functionary, now invested with great dignity by the importance of the affair he found himself engaged in. "If so be how you've got the lady's valise, she is all right and can go. But in that case this is yours, and it comes on you to account, for them are stolen spoons. Have to take you in charge; all four of ye."

"Why, you impudent scoundrel!" roared the captain; "I wish I had my pistols here. I'd teach you to insult a gentleman!" shaking his fist.

The dispute waxed fast and furious. The outsiders began to take part in it, and there is no telling how it would have ended had not an explosion, followed by a heavy fall and a scream of pain, been heard in the adjoining room. The crowd rushed to the scene of the new attraction.

The door was fast. It was soon burst open and the mystery explained. The thief who had carried off the captain's valise by mistake for his own, had taken it up to his room and opened it to gloat over the contents he supposed it to contain, thrusting his hands in after the spoons. In doing so the pistol had gone off, the bullet making a round hole through the side of the valise, and a corresponding wound in the calf of his leg.

The wounded rascal was taken in charge, first by the detective and then the doctor; and the duellists and the wedded pair struck up a friendship on the ground of their mutual mishap, which culminated in a supper where the fun was abundant, and where it would be hard to say which was in the best of spirits—the captain for recovering his pistols, the bride for recovering her nightcap, the bridegroom for escaping the station house, or the duellists for escaping each other. All resolved to "mark that day with a white stone," and henceforth to mark their names on their black traveling bags in white letters.

A young man came into Toledo, Ohio, from a few miles abroad last week, and having sold his wood and put up his horses, set forth to shop. Something in the window of a ladies' furnishing store caught his eye and he went in. The crowd of women frightened him, and when the young lady behind the counter asked him what he wanted, he wanted to die, but he didn't say so. He managed to say, with a painful effort, that he wanted "one o' them wire rat traps in the window, and if you please, ma'am, would you show me how to set it?"

My Girl.

A little corner with its crib,
A little mug, a spoon, a bib;
A little tooth so pearly white,
A little rubber ring to bite.

A little plate all lettered round,
A little rattle to resound;
A little creeping—see! she stands!
A little step 'twixt outstretched hands.

A little doll with flaxen hair,
A little willow rocking-chair;
A little dress of richest hue,
A little pair of gaiters blue.

A little school day after day,
A little schoolma'am to obey;
A little study—soon 'tis past,
A little graduate at last.

A little muff for winter weather,
A little jocky hat and feather;
A little sack with funny pockets,
A little chair, a ring and locket.

A little while to dance and bow,
A little escort homeward now;
A little party somewhat late,
A little lingering at the gate.

A little walk in leafy June,
A little talk while shines the moon;
A little reference to papa,
A little planning with mamma.

A little ceremony grave,
A little struggle to be brave;
A little cottage on a lawn,
A little kiss—my girl was gone!

NEW HINTS FOR TABLE ETIQUETTE.

There are a great many people, who behave well otherwise, but at the table they do things that if not absolutely outre and ensemble, are at least pianissimo and sine die.

It is with a view to elevating the popular taste and etherializing, so to speak, the manners and customs of our readers, that we give below a few hints on table etiquette.

On seating yourself at the table draw off your gloves and put them in your lap, under your napkin. If you have just cleaned your gloves with benzine, you might leave them out in the front yard.

When you are at dinner do not take up a raw oyster and playfully ask your host if it is dead. Remarks about death at dinner are in very poor taste.

Pears should be held by the stems and peeled gently but firmly, not as though you were skinning a dead horse. It is not bon ton.

Oranges are held on a fork while being peeled, and the facetious style of squirting the juice into the eyes of your hostess is now au revoir.

Stones in cherries or other fruit should not be placed upon the table-cloth, but slid quietly and unostentatiously into the pocket of your neighbor, or noiselessly tossed under the table.

If you strike a worm in your fruit do not call attention to it by mashing it in the nut cracker. This is not only uncouth, but it is regarded in the best society as base and exceedingly vice versa.

Macaroni should be cut into short pieces and eaten with an even, graceful motion, not absorbed by the yard.

In drinking wine, when you get to the bottom of your glass do not throw your head back and draw in your breath like the exhaust of a bath-tub in order to get the last drop, as it engenders a feeling of the most depressing melancholy among the guests.

After eating a considerable amount, do not arise and unbuckle your vest strap in order to get more room, as it is exceedingly au fait and deshabille.

If by mistake you drink out of your finger-bowl, laugh heartily and make some facetious remark which will change the course of conversation and renew the friendly feeling among the members of the party.—Bill Nye.

VAIN ACCUMULATIONS.

The art collection of A. T. Stewart has gone the way of his other accumulations. The immense business which he built up with rare sagacity and energy has disappeared. His whole fortune, indeed, is broken up in fragments. It is a comparatively few years since he died, and yet nothwithstanding his remarkable career, his obliteration is almost complete. It will not be very long before it will be difficult to find any trace of him, unless the institution at Garden City be the single exception.

Rarely has the vanity of mere accumulation been more strikingly illustrated. How much that he labored to get together is being put to the use that a wise man would have had it put to? His property is distributed among people whom he never had the slightest idea of exerting himself for. Nor was there any reason why he should have cared to leave more than a comfortable provision for his widow, unless he had contemplated charity. What a difference between his record and those of other childless men who can readily be named! Stephen Girard, Johns Hopkins, George Peabody, Samuel J. Tilden (if his intentions are not thwarted) are examples of successful lives, because they left them well rounded by the spirit of true humanity. George W. Childs chooses to enjoy the luxury of charitable deeds as he goes through life, and in this policy he is a long way ahead of many fortunate men in realizing on his success.

If Stewart had bequeathed his palace for a picture gallery and left his works of art in it for the good of the public, he would have done something, at least, to vindicate his extraordinary money-getting. As it is, there is neither rhyme nor reason in it. It is as objectless as that of a miser, and all that he has built falls hopelessly to pieces now that he is dead. But there is a moral left by the dispersion of the great estate, and it refers to the folly of purposeless and useless accumulation.—New York World.

Hard to Please. Clothier's Salesman—"You come here and get a complete suit for ten dollars; you take it home, you keep it for two weeks, you bring it back, and you get your money again! What more do you want?" Customer—"And our car fare."—Harper's Bazar.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 29, 1887.

A PORTRAIT of Gov. Oliver Ames in the Springfield Republican! Surely, the millenium dawns.

THE memorial fund started immediately after the death of Gen. Logan, for the benefit of his widow, now amounts to $62,934.

IT is intimated that the Boston and Maine octopus is reaching out its tenacles toward Providence, intending to swallow the Providence and Worcester railroad.

A BRONZE statue of John C. Calhoun, the Palmetto State's most distinguished son, was unveiled at Charleston, S. C., Tuesday, with a fine military display and an oration by Secretary Lamar.

SOMEBODY started a report the other day that U. S. District Attorney Geo. M. Stearns had tendered his resignation to the president, and was going to run for governor next fall,—an unlikely story which has no foundation in fact, for "he himself has said it."

THE interstate commissioners decide that the Boston railroads can allow a rebate on exports, as that is not the discrimination between persons (American persons) contemplated by the law. The long and short haul section of the act is suspended for 75 days on the Pacific railroads.

OUR Republican legislators have something to consider besides the question of winning the prohibitory vote, and that is the important question of holding the temperance element, still faithful to the party, but upon whom party bonds are resting more and more lightly every year. It will take something more than unmeaning platform planks to hold these thousands much longer.

THOUSANDS of trees ought to be planted in Massachusetts to-morrow by farmers and land owners. There are deserts which in this way may be made to blossom as the rose, and there is money in it, too. There have been 700,000 acres of trees planted in Nebraska, and it is estimated that 1,000,000 trees were planted in Kansas on the 14th of this month. The Bay State should follow the example of its Western sisters.

WITH returns from all but fifteen towns, the vote on the license question in Massachusetts stands as follows: Yes, 92,013; No, 107,384; majority against license, 15,371. This is an encouraging exhibit of the growing temperance sentiment in the state, and it ought to open the eyes of the Republicans in the Legislature to the pressing necessity of doing something at once toward redeeming the party pledge in favor of constitutional prohibition. Or do the Republicans prefer to admit that this was a mere pretense, for the purpose of catching prohibition votes?

THE Springfield Republican is engaged in the laudable work of showing up the lobby and its demoralizing work at the state house,—a work whose necessity is demonstrated by the exposures in the Beverly investigation. Take, for instance this choice morsel, from the evidence of Everett A. Davis, a lawyer and ex-representative, who was paid $226 for working for the divisionists:

"I agreed to appear before the committee, but did not; the money I used for myself except about $25 for expenses; most of this was spent for rum and cigars; I would ask a man to take a drink and then charge it to Beverly. The rum and cigars were bought at the various hotels; if three or four members were discussing Beverly at Young's or Parker's, I generally asked the crowd. Some that were in favor and some that were against the division drank. It was generally all charged to Beverly. * * * My work was principally in the barrooms."

WHILE the colored people of the South are displaying an encouraging advance in intelligence and capacity, they are at the same time confronted with many obstacles to their progress in various directions. In Richmond, Va., for instance, colored stone cutters and masons are refused employment on a public building by the committee in charge of the work, and even if the committee were willing, they could not get the work, probably, as they are not members of the stone cutters' union, cannot get in, and its members will not work on any building on which they are employed. Such unjust discrimination is a sorry way of lifting up the colored race, in whose elevation lies, to a large extent, the hope of future prosperity for a large portion of the South.

THE railroad commissioners have issued their report on the Bussey bridge disaster, and it is a document that must make the managers of the Boston and Providence road wince. It is shown that the bridge was built without any intelligent oversight or tests, that from the time of its construction to the day it fell it was examined by one man only, and he incompetent, that the tests recommended by the board in 1881 were not made, and that no guard rails or timbers were used because of the ignorant prejudice of the superintendent of construction. The commissioners are convinced that if proper care had been exercised in building and testing the structure the disaster would not have occurred, and add: "The board renews the expression of its belief that a preventable accident is a crime." The strange fact is also mentioned that the air brake was not in use on the fated train, nor was the number of brakemen up to the requirements of the statute.

Eleven cars of a freight train left standing on the track at South Spencer, Wednesday, started down grade for East Brookfield. The engine and three other cars backed after them, and in attempting to jump on the runaways Conductor J. A. DuBois of Springfield fell under the wheels and was killed. The station agent at East Brookfield saw the cars coming, and switched them to a side track, ditching seven, but preventing a collision with a passenger train which was almost due.

Portions of Missouri, Kentucky and Arkansas were visited by a destructive cyclone last week Thursday night, which killed about twenty persons and wrecked many buildings, one or two villages being practically wiped out. Cyclone cellars proved to be of great value in saving life.

W. R. Harvey, who first made a summer resort of Forest Lake, and brought it to its present popular condition, has sold the grounds to L. A. and C. A. Royce of Brattleboro, Vt., who will continue to run it as before. Mr. Harvey will continue to make appointments for excursions and parties, at his Springfield residence, 144 North Main Street. New cottages and walks are to be built this spring, and the grounds otherwise improved.

Kitty Hayes, for the larceny of a cloak, was asked to pay costs of $16.85 at the district court, Wednesday, and being unable to do so was sent to jail. Henry Lynch was also sent up for drunkenness in default of $6.44. Thursday a hearing was had in the matter of beer seized from Catherine O'Connor, Thorndike, March 17th, and it was declared forfeited. Peter Paradise, Joseph Sampson, John Cullett and Henry Kedu, for attempting to shoot Calm Blankey at Three Rivers, April 10th and 14th, had their cases continued until to-morrow.

The Boston & Albany road has shown its appreciation of the work done by the Palmer firemen at the depot fire, by a check for $100, which Engineer Kenerson received Monday, accompanied by the following letter:

Boston & Albany Railroad.
Springfield, Mass., April 23d, 1887.
George B. Kenerson, Esq.
Chief Palmer Fire Department.
Palmer, Mass.

Dear Sir:—I desire in behalf of this company to thank the Palmer Fire Department for the timely and efficient service rendered by it in arresting the flames which seemed likely to destroy our depot. I also enclose a check for $100, which I beg you will use in such way as may best subserve the interests of the department. Yours truly,
J. A. RUMRILL, Vice President.

Our correspondent, "X. X. X.," presents the pressing need of a high school building forcibly and truthfully. Those citizens who think there has been a breach of faith in bringing the matter before the town at this time are laboring under a misapprehension of the facts, as we understand them. There is to be no attempt to "force" the town to build, that we are aware of, but there is simply a growing conviction in the minds of those who have given the subject the most thoughtful consideration that the town cannot afford to postpone the matter longer. A years' postponement now means at least two years more without a high school building—a delay that must greatly injure the efficiency of the school. Taxes will be high this year, to be sure, and it is neither advisable nor necessary to make them any higher. For such an object as this the town can well afford to borrow the money, distributing the payment of the loan so that it will not be felt, and in the meantime our boys and girls will be reaping the benefits of the outlay at a rate which will pay exceedingly well on the investment.

THE HIGH SCHOOL QUESTION.

Editor Journal:—That Palmer needs a high school building everybody allows. That such a building is badly needed has been widely published; how crying the need perhaps not all know. Our high school has, until of late, been small in numbers and low in grade, the former largely because of the latter, for Palmer has never lacked bright boys and girls, who ought to have been crowding the halls of a fine high school. But these bright boys and girls have been sent to Springfield, to Wilbraham, to Monson, to Brimfield, even; expense has been incurred, the pupils have been separated from home just when they most needed its influences, and all this for the instruction they ought to receive free of charge in the home school. Of late the school has grown. Less than three years ago twenty-six names were registered; today the school room is full, and one-fifth of the pupils are stowed in the recitation room. The grade has also been raised, hence the growth in numbers. One year from now graduates will go from the school fitted for any college in Massachusetts. Do the citizens of Palmer want this work stopped? At the beginning of the next school year the high school will number from sixty to seventy pupils. The school room seats forty. How can the work indicated above be carried on successfully? I said the grade of the school had been raised. It has. But still, except in the classical department, it is below the average of high schools in the state. And why? Simply this: The lower grades are suffering from over-crowding. A fresh swarm of children yearly knocks for admission; room must be found for the new comers; an advance is made through all the grades, and the half-fledged offspring of the high school are pushed out into the world, nominally at the end of a four years' course, really when scarcely three years have been spent upon high school work. Pupils who can afford the expense may supplement their high school course by a year or two in some of the numerous academies; the poorer ones must enter upon life at a manifest disadvantage both from lack of age and because of inadequate equipment. All this would be true even with the best work on the teachers' part. But how can the teachers, from high school down, competent, patient, and untiring as they are known to be, thoroughly instruct all the pupils who can be packed into every foot of available space in their respective rooms, and look after an overflow meeting besides? Again, packed into an over-crowded building, the high school has no laboratory, no room for scientific work of any kind, necessarily conducting these studies at a disadvantage. Here we have then the picture of a school above the average in size, equal to the best in intellect, enthusiastic for work, and yet left to struggle against every conceivable obstacle in the accomplishment of its work. Certainly the fathers and mothers of Palmer ought to think of these things before final disposition is made of the warrant for next Monday's town meeting. X. X. X.

THREE RIVERS.

Leonard Aldrich is painting his house and other buildings.

The seats in the Union Evangelical church will be free the coming year.

Rev. C. E. Amaron, principal of the French Protestant college at Lowell will preach at the Union church next Sunday morning, and in the evening will speak on the French missions in the United States.

The company are also to put in a new boiler house 98 by 48 feet, with ten 66-inch boilers, with a capacity for 1000-horse powe.; the chimney is to be 132 feet high. This boiler house is to be a central station and furnish steam for all parts of the yard.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, April 27th, 1887.

The Senate Beverly investigating committee came to a sudden end of its investigation Thursday afternoon. Testimony taken during the day did not amount to anything of moment, and at the end of the afternoon the counsel on both sides agreed to submit the case to the committee without arguments. So it remained only for the committee to close the investigation. The testimony of Dennis W. Quill, Wednesday evening, to the House committee, made him appear ridiculous, and made his charges extravagant and childish. Yet it was mainly upon those charges that the investigation was ordered. He testified mainly to "impressions," not facts, and most of what he said of any consequence was squarely denied by the persons concerned.

Representative Moseley of Newburyport sent to the House Thursday his resignation of his membership, and it was accepted. He will be secretary of the new interstate commerce commission.

After two hours' debate, the House rejected, Thursday, 35 to 109, the bill to allow the Boston & Maine road to buy the Eastern.

The railroad committee has reported against reviving the charter of the Williamsburg & North Adams road. Senators Phillips and Jones of Berkshire and Representatives Adams and Crosby dissent.

Friday was devoted by the Legislature to a trip down Boston Harbor to inspect the pumping station and ocean outlet of the Boston sewer system. One who has never visited the works would be astonished at their magnitude. Up to April 1st, 1887, the cost of the works was $5,367,908, and it costs about $60,000 a year to run them. Last year the ordinary amount of sewage pumped daily was 36,000,000 gallons. The fly wheels of the great engine are each 39 feet in diameter (there are two of them) and their weight is 36 tons each. The tunnel under Dorchester Bay is 143 feet below low water. They had to go to this depth to get below the mud of the harbor, into solid rock. The tunnel acts as a syphon and the sewage rises again by natural laws and flows to the outlet at Moon Island, where it is discharged into the ocean. This sewer system is so made that it can be connected with a future system to drain the valley of the Charles and Mystic rivers. That problem is now before the Legislature.

Some of the members were saying Friday that the session could not possibly end before the middle of June, and that Speaker Noyes's predictions are away off.

The House on Monday postponed to May 3d the contest which is pending to revive the charter of the old Williamsburg & North Adams railroad so as to give a competing line over the hills to the Hoosac Tunnel. They postponed to May 4th the bill to allow gas companies to furnish electric light, and on Tuesday they defeated by a large vote, after a short debate, the bill to put electric light companies under the supervision of the gas commissioners.

The rules have been suspended in both branches to admit an order of Mr. Bigelow of Watertown in regard to further legislation to regulate the manufacture and sale of imitation dairy products, so as to protect the consumers of dairy products from fraud and imposition.

On Monday a persistent attempt was made to reverse the defeat of the bill to allow the consolidation of the Boston and Maine with the Eastern road. A vigorous debate was followed by two roll calls, but by 79 to 100 the House refused to table the motion to reconsider, and by 85 to 103 defeated the motion itself. But the road stood a great deal better than on last week's vote, and next year, with an understanding of how the ground lies, it will doubtless go in to win.

A large majority of the House helped to bury the bill to provide for street superintendents in towns.

The Senate on Tuesday finished its consideration of the Sunday bill, and passed it to be engrossed by 19 to 9. But it has been materially changed since it left the House, and must go back for concurrence. I should not be surprised if a conference committee were appointed, and the matter would drag along till late in the session. By 17 to 10 the Senate amended it to forbid the letting of yachts and boats on Sunday, but they stood 21 to 6 against an amendment to prohibit the letting of horses and carriages. Jews and Seventh day people are not alowed to keep open shop on Sunday.

The House Beverly investigating committee has been given a week's more time, or to May 4, in which to make report. The investigation has not been particularly prolific, but it has done much to let people know about state house methods.

On Tuesday the House debated the high license bill on its second stage, and passed it to be engrossed after an entire afternoon of sharp debate. But its character as a high license bill was destroyed by the adoption of an amendent of Mr. Gile of Worcester to make the minimum in the bill the maximum limit in each class, and to make the future minimum half of that maximum. The vote stood 78 to 82 for the amendment on a rising count, but a roll call resulted in 87 yeas to 86 nays, much to the chagrin of the high license people.

As soon as possible Wednesday forenoon Mr. Quincy of Quincy moved to reconsider the rejection of the high license bill, and then moved to put that motion over to next Wednesday. His idea was to have time to talk the matter over and see if some agreement could not be reached. Mr. Wardwell of Haverhill said that it was hoped that by that time a graduated license bill could be presented, with a high license for the large places and a smaller fee for places that could not pay so much. Postpouement was carried.

The House judiciary committee has reported that the bill to allow the incorporation of labor or trade organizations ought not to pass.

A resolve from the committee on claims, —Senator Marble of Worcester dissenting, —allows $79,495.62 to Walter Shanly for his losses on the Hoosac Tunnel.

The House debated all Wednesday afternoon on the bill to amend the arbitration law, the question being whether the names of employes who appear before the state board should be secret. A large vote was given for secrecy.

Wednesday afternoon in the Senate was devoted to the laoors' holiday bill. Reconsideration of the reference to the next Legislature was voted by 14 to 9. The bill was strongly opposed and strongly supported. Senator Hartwell of Worcester moved a substitute to make the day like Arbor day, and the bill went over to Thursday.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPSHIRE, ss. PROBATE COURT.—To the heirs-at-law next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of Timothy R. Collins, late of Ware, in said county, deceased, greeting:

Whereas, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased has been presented to said court, for probate, by Mary T. Collins, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to her the executrix therein named, and by giving bond without surety or sureties.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Ware, in said county of Hampshire, on the twenty-first day of June, next, at two o'clock in the afternoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said Mary T. Collins is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the Ware Standard, published at Ware, the last publication to be two days at least, before said Court,

Witness, William G. Bassett, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this twenty-second day of April in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven.

3w5 HUBBARD W. ABBOTT, Register.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN, ss. To GEO. W. ELY, Constable of the Town of Palmer, greeting.

In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, you are hereby directed to notify and warn all the inhabitants of the Town of Palmer qualified to vote in Town affairs, to meet at the Town House, in said Palmer, on Monday, the second day of May, next, at ten o'clock a. m., to act on the following articles, viz:

ARTICLE 1. To choose a moderator to preside at said meeting.

ART. 2 To see if the town will purchase a suitable tract of land, and erect a High School Building.

ART. 3. To raise such sums of money as may be necessary to purchase land and to erect a High School Building, and appropriate the same.

ART. 4. To see if the town will authorize its Treasurer to borrow money in anticipation of the taxes of the current year, and the year next ensuing, the same to be paid from said taxes.

ART. 5. To choose all necessary committees and give them instructions.

ART. 6. To hear reports of committees and act thereon.

ART. 7. To see if the town will accept the provisions of Sections 1, 2, 3 and 4 of Chapter 109 of the Laws of 1885, relating to groves to be used for picnics and other lawful amusements.

And you are hereby directed to serve this warrant by posting up attested copies thereof, at the different public places designated by the vote of the town, seven days, at least, before the holding of said meeting, and cause this warrant to be printed in the Palmer Journal, at least two issues before the holding of said meeting.

Hereof fail not, and make due return of this warrant with your doings thereon to the Town Clerk, on or before the holding of said meeting.

Given under our hands this twenty-first day of April, A. D., 1887.

Board of Health

REGULATIONS.

The Board of Health, appointed by the town of Ware, hereby make and publish, as required by law, the following "Regulations for the public health and safety."

Prevention of Disease.

PRIVIES.

REGULATION 1. No privy vault or reservoir, unless made water-tight, shall be established within TWO RODS of any well, spring or other source of water supply used for culinary or domestic purposes.

REG. 2 All vaults or other depositories for night soil are required to be cleaned twice in each year: in the spring on or before May 15, and in the fall on or before November 15. Disinfectants are to be freely used during the summer months.

All town officers are reminded that the duty of carrying out the provisions of this article—so far as it relates to school houses and public buildings—devolves upon them.

REG. 3. Parties removing night soil from any premises are required to cover their loads with dry earth, or make use of water-tight casks with well fitted covers, before conveying them through any street; and all such refuse matter, wherever deposited, must be covered with earth or other material.

DRAINS, CESS-POOLS, ETC.

REG. 4. The owners or occupants of houses or tenements are required to clean all drains and cess-pools for house slops on or before the fifteenth of May each year, and to use disinfectants in them frequently during the summer. Also to remove the earth saturated by said drains, etc.

If suitable drains or cess-pools for such purposes are not already made for the use of occupants of dwellings or tenements, the owners of such property are required to make such drains or cess-pools, or provide means for the removal of house slops, so that they shall not become a nuisance.

REG. 5. No OPEN drains for the conduction of house slops will in any case be allowed.

REG. 6. No sewer, drain, or cess-pool, not water-tight shall be located within two rods of any well or other source of water used for domestic purposes. No drains for house slops, or other deleterious matter, will in any case be allowed to discharge upon the surface of the ground, or into the gutters or sewers of the public streets as they are now constructed.

REG. 7. No house offal, dead animals, or refuse of any kind shall be thrown upon any street, court, lane, alley, public square, or vacant lot, or into any highway of this town by any resident; no butcher, fishmonger, or vendor of merchandise shall leave any refuse upon any of the places aforesaid.

REG. 8. All families are required to have a properly covered receptacle for swill and house offal, and cause the contents to be regularly removed as often between the first day of May and the first day of November as twice a week, and once a week at all other seasons.

REG. 9. The occupants of houses and tenements are required to remove from the cellars of the same all decayed or decaying vegetables, and everything in a condition to vitiate the air: to admit the light and air to them as freely as possible. Are also advised to use whitewash freely.

SWINE, SLAUGHTER HOUSES, ETC.

REG. 10. No swine shall be kept within the limits of the fire district, except in pens kept dry and regularly and freely disinfected. The Board will order the removal of such animals and pens in any case where they may appear prejudicial to the public health, comfort, or safety. The Board will also order the removal of any privy, bencoop, or any other obstruction that may become objectionable on similar grounds.

REG. 11. No slaughter house, soap works, or abbatoir shall be established or used as such within three-fourths of a mile of the Library building, and none elsewhere within the limits of the town, unless kept free from all obnoxious odors.

REG. 12. No manufacturing, storing of merchandise, or other business giving rise to obnoxious or injurious odors, shall be established within town limits except in such locations as this board shall assign; as all existing manufacturies, stables, etc., shall use all means available to render them inodorous and unobjectional.

DISEASED ANIMALS, SALE OF FOOD, MILK, ETC.

REG. 13. No animal affected with an infectious or contagious disease shall be brought within the limits of the town. No diseased animal, or its flesh, shall be sold or offered for sale; and no decayed, diseased, or unfit meat, fish, vegetables, fruit, or other articles of food shall be sold or offered for sale.

REG. 14. No person shall sell, or offer for sale, adulterated milk, or milk produced by animals diseased or improperly fed; and whoever is supplied with milk which there is good reason to believe is adulterated, or is so produced, shall at once submit the same with the name of the seller to the Board of Health.

VACCINATION.

REG. 15. EVERY CHILD MUST BE VACCINATED before reaching TWO YEARS OF AGE, AND ALL PERSONS EXPOSED TO THE CONTAGION OF SMALL-POX MUST BE IMMEDIATELY VACCINATED. The Board earnestly recommend that all children be vaccinated before they are six months of age, and that all persons be re-vaccinated whenever small-pox breaks out near them, or they are in any way exposed to that disease.

REG. 16. All persons above two years of age who have not been vaccinated, MUST BE IMMEDIATELY.

REG. 17. All incorporated and other manufacturing companies in this town shall cause each new employe to be vaccinated on entrance, unless proof is furnished that said employe has been vaccinated within a reasonable time.

REG. 18. The provisions of Regulation 17 shall also apply to the keeper of the Almshouse in reference to each new occupant.

REG. 19. The School Committee "shall not allow a child who has not been duly vaccicated to be admitted to, or connected with the public schools."

(NOTE.—The Board would call attention to the public statutes on vaccination, Chap. 80, Sec. 51-55.)

Restriction of Disease.

REG 20. Any householder in whose dwelling there shall at any time occur a case of small-pox, diphtheria or scarletina, shall immediately notify the Board of Health of the same, and until instructions are received from the Board shall not permit any clothing, or other property that may have been exposed to infection, to be removed from the house, nor shall any occupant take up residence elsewhere without consent of the Board.

REG. 21. Any physician who may be called to a case of SMALL-POX, DIPHTHERIA OR SCARLETINA, shall at once report such case or cases to the Board; and whenever there shall come under the observation of any physican such a number of cases of typhoid fever, or other zymotic diseases, as in his opinion to justify the belief that a considerable epidemic thereof exists, he shall at once report the same to the Board, with such suggestions in regard thereto as may to him seem expedient.

REG. 22. Persons affected with either of the diseases specified in Regulation 20, and all articles infected with the same, must at once be separated from all persons liable to contract or communicate the di-ease, and none but nurses and physicians will be allowed access to persons sick with said diseases.

REG. 23. No person or article liable to propagate a dangerous disease shall be brought within the limits of the town without the special consent of the Board; and whenever it shall appear to any one that any person or article has been brought into town, immediate notice thereof shall be given to the Board, with full particulars pertaining thereto.

Special Notice.

Careful inspections will be made by the Board of Health, or Inspectors appointed for that purpose, from time to time.

Owners and occupants of houses and tenements ARE ALIKE RESPONSIBLE BY LAW for a full compliance with these regulations.

The Board will reserve the power in special cases and circumstances to modify the requirements of Regulations 2 and 4, in such manner as may in their judgment be advisable or necessary.

DISINFECTANTS.—As general disinfectants dry earth, lime, or chloride of lime serve a good purpose. If wanted in a liquid form, it may be made by adding to each gallon of water three pounds of sulphate of iron (copperas,) and a pint of carbolic acid solution. For use inside of houses a solution of nitrate of lead, one part to one hundred parts of water, is valuable. Cloths soaked in such a solution and hung up in a foul air will quickly destroy bad odors. Chloride of zinc 1 part to 200 parts of water is also recommended.

The Board earnestly ask the co-operation of every citizen in securing the desirable sanitary condition, to promote which, the foregoing regulations are framed. Persons cognizant of the violation of any of these regulations, are requested to inform the Board of Health of the same. This is to be done by a written communication to the Secretary of the Board, defining distinctly the character of such violation, location, and names of delinquent parties if known.

WARE, MASS., April 23d, 1887.

"The Board shall make such regulations as it judges necessary for the public health and safety." "Whoever violates any such regulations shall forfeit a sum not exceeding one hundred dollars.

"The Board of Health office shall order the owner or occupant at his own expense to remove any nuisance, source of filth, or cause of sickness, found on private property, within twenty-four hours, or such other time as it deems reasonable, after notice served as provided in the following section; and if the owner or occupant neglects so to do, he shall forfeit a sum not exceeding twenty dollars for every day which he knowingly permits such nuisance or cause of sickness to remain after the time prescribed for the removal thereof."

"If the owner or occupant fails to comply with such order, the Board may cause the nuisance, source of filth, or cause of sickness, to be removed, and all expenses incurred thereby shall be paid by the owner, occupant, or other person who caused or permitted the same, if he has had actual notice from the Board of Health of the existence thereof." ASSESSORS' NOTICE!

To the Inhabitants and other Persons Liable to pay Taxes in the Town of Palmer for the year 1887:

The Assessors of the Town of Palmer hereby give notice to the inhabitants of said Town, and all other persons liable to pay taxes therein, that they will receive at the Town House on the second day of May next, the valuation of estates, and all persons liable to be taxed in said Town are hereby notified to bring in to us true and perfect lists of all Polls (males twenty years old and upwards), and schedules and estimates of the Personal and Real Estates for which they are liable to pay taxes in said Town, possessed by them on the first day of May next.

Mortgaged Real Estate.

Any Mortgagor or Mortgagee of Real Estate situated within this Town may bring in to the undersigned Assessors, within the time above specified, a statement under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such Real Estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest as a Mortgagor or Mortgagee therein. When only a part of the property described in any mortgage is situated within this town, an estimate of the amount of the Mortgagee's interest in such part; or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the Mortgagee's interest in each estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement.—[Chap. 175 of the Acts of 1882.

CHAPTER ELEVEN OF THE PUBLIC STATUTES.

SECTION 14. "When any person has an interest in taxable real estate, as holder of a duly recorded mortgage, given to secure the payment of money, the amount of which is fixed and certain, the amount of his interest as mortgagee shall be assessed as real estate in the place where the land lies; and the mortgagor shall be assessed only for the value of said real estate after deducting the assessed value of all such mortgagee's interests therein. When such property is situated in two or more places, the amount of the mortgagee's interest to be assessed in each place shall be proportioned to the assessed value in the respective places of the mortgaged real estate, deducting therefrom the taxable amount of prior mortgages if any thereon."

SECTION 15. "If any holder of such a mortgage fails to file in the Assessors' office a statement under oath of all his estate liable to taxation under the preceeding section, including a statement of the full amount remaining unpaid upon such mortgage and of his interest therein, the amount stated in the mortgage shall be conclusive as to the extent of such interest; but the mortgagee's interest in such real estate shall not be assessed at a greater sum than the fair cash valuation of the land and the structures thereon or affixed thereto; and the amount of a mortgage interest in an estate that has been divided after the creation of such mortgage shall not be required to be apportioned upon the several parts of such estate, except as provided in sections eighty-one to eigty-three inclusive."

SECTION 16. "Mortgagors and Mortgagees referred to in the two preceeding sections, shall for the purpose of taxation, be deemed joint owners until the mortgagee takes possession; and until such possession is taken by the first mortgagee, the Assessors or the collector of taxes, upon application to any one of them, shall give to any such Mortgagee or Mortgagor a tax bill showing the whole tax on the mortgaged estate and the amount included in the valuation thereof as the interest of each Mortgagee and of the Mortgagor respectively. If the first Mortgagee is in possession, he shall be deemed sole owner; and any other Mortgagee in possession shall be deemed joint owner with prior mortgagees."

When a statement in conformity to the law above quoted is brought in, the Real Estate therein returned will be assessed under Sections 14, 15 and 16 of Chap. eleven of Public Statutes. But in cases where the Mortgagor of the Real Estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, no statement or return is required from either Mortgagee or Mortgagor unless requested by the Assessors in writing.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, HAMPDEN, ss. PROBATE COURT.—To the next of kin, and all persons interested in the estate of Martha E. Wardwell, Richard Wardwell, Lucy J. Wardwell and Bertha M. Wardwell, all of Stafford in the state of Connecticut, Minors, Greeting:

Whereas, Ida L. Root (formerly Ida L. Wardwell), foreign Guardian of said minors, has presented to said court her petition praying for license to sell at private sale, certain real estate, therein specified, of her said wards, for investment, and that no further bond may be required than the one she has already given in said state of Connecticut.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the first Wednesday of May, next, at nine o'clock before noon, to show cause, if any you have, against granting the same.

And said petitioner is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week, for three successive weeks, in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper published at Palmer, the last publication to be two days, at least, before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this thirteenth day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven.

3w3 SAMUEL B. SPOONER, Register.

NOTICE is hereby given that the subscriber has been duly appointed administrator of the estate of Emeline W. Hastings, late of Palmer, in the county of Hampden, deceased; and has taken upon himself that trust by giving bonds as the law directs. All persons having demands upon the estate of said deceased are required to exhibit the same; and all persons indebted to said estate are called upon to make payment to Three Meetings.

I paled the first time that I met your eyes,
Then strangely blushed. Alas! My truant heart!
You made some pleasant talk of sunset skies—
Unwritten songs that mock the poet's art.
I answered smiling. When you came again
(You sought me next) all breath and speech were gone,
Held back by tumults of exquisite pain;
While of themselves our two hands thrilled as one
A brief, sweet moment—I can feel it yet!
We sat apart and talked of common things,
And heard the wind and rush of swallow's wings
Fill up our pauses. . . . Last, by chance, we met
In summer dusk, alone, unseen, unheard—
Stood, folded heart to heart, without a word!

THE STRONGEST MAN ON EARTH.

There is a man on the Darson river, below Dayton, named Angela Cordella, who claims to be the strongest man in the world. He is an Italian, aged 28, and stands 5 feet 10 inches, weighing 198 pounds. His strength was born with him, for he had no athletic training. He differs chiefly from other men in the osseous structure. Although not of unusual size his spinal column is much beyond the usual width, and his bones and joints are made on a similar large and generous scale. He has lifted a man weighing 200 pounds with the middle finger of his right hand. The man stood with one foot on the floor, his arms outstretched, his hands grasped by two persons to balance his body. Cordella then stooped and placed the third finger of his right hand under the man's foot, and without any perceptible effort raised him to a height of four feet and deposited him on a table near at hand. Once two powerful men waylaid Cordella, with the intention of thrashing him, but he seized one in each hand and hammered them together until the life was nearly knocked out of them.—Virginia Footlight.

OLD CHESTNUT IN A NEW BURR.

A story is told in regard to a christening in Peoria, Ill. Mother, father and infant were on hand. Also the godfather. The good old priest proceeded with the ceremony until it was necessary to name the child. The godfather, as usual in such cases, had written the name on a card, and when the ceremony had reached this point he dived into his pocket and handed out one. The priest took it and a look of horror came over his face. The godfather turned firy red, went down in his pocket again, fished out another card, handed it to the priest and received in return the one he had first given the good man, and the ceremony proceeded without further interruption. The one he had first handed the priest read, "I am somewhat of a liar myself."

Customer—"I must say I don't like this milk."

Milkman—"Why, what's the matter with it?"

Customer—"Just look at it; don't you see that it is blue?"

Milkman—"Well, yes; it is a little darker than usual."

Customer—"What is the cause of it?"

Milkman—"I think I can explain it."

Customer—"Well, I'd be glad to hear you."

Milkman—"You see we weaned the calf a few days ago, and probably the old cow feels a little blue about it. That is the only way I can account for it."—Texas Siftings.

WHAT THE GREAT WEST LACKS.—Omaha father—"Now, Bobby, I have a little home all ready and am going back East after your mother."

Bobby (lately from the East)—"Well, I'll be a good boy while you're gone."

"You know I told you if you were real good I'd bring you a present of your selecting. Now what do you want ma and I to get for you?"

"Bring me a big box full of stones to throw at cats."—Omaha World.

A Chattanooga negro lately received a check for $10,000 in payment for a lot of land, and went to get it cashed. The paying teller asked him how much he wanted in cash. "All de papah calls fur," he said. Thereupon the teller began counting out packages of bills, and when a big pile was placed before the negro he looked at them in amazement and said: "I'se jist par'lysed, boss. Gimme $1.50 an' you can keep de res' till I call fur it."

A LEVEL-HEADED GIRL.—First Omaha Girl—"Of all things? You must be crazy. The idea of marrying a circus performer!"

Second Omaha Girl—"I know what I am about, Mary. He makes his living walking tight rope."

"What of that?"

"I have the satisfaction of knowing that if he ever takes to drinking he'll kill himself."—Omaha World.

Postmaster L. Davis of the town of Solar, Jackson county, Ill., receives the moderate salary of 10 cents a year. The postmaster of Peck, Ill., got 30 cents last year, while the postmaster of Lear, Ark., got 31 cents. It is said that there are more than 16,000 postmasters who receive no more than $40 a year, and 10,000 who receive about $8 a year.

The freezing up of the town pump at Pierre, D. T., has doubled the trade in beer at that point, but has almost entirely paralyzed the milk industry of the place.—Lowell Citizen.

Nothing suggests the arrival of the millennium more forcibly than the sight of an old tom cat sleeping peacefully by the fireplace with its head resting on a boot-jack. Merchant Traveler.

"Of earthly goods, the best is a good wife;
A bad, the bitterest curse of earthly life."

How many wives who to-day are almost distracted because of their many ailments, all tending to make home unhappy, would become the best of all earthly goods if they got rid of their troubles by using Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," which is an unfailing remedy for those diseases and weaknesses which afflict the female sex. Send ten cents in stamps for Dr. Pierce's complete treatise on these diseases, illustrated by numerous wood cuts and colored plates. Address, Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

Mrs. H. G. Porter of Jacksonville, Vt., says, April 2, 1885: "Dr. Seth Arnold's Cough Killer has been used in my family for a number of years, and we find it excellent for a cold." For sale by all druggists. Price, 25 cents, 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle.

Mothers, always use Dr. Seth Arnold's Soothing and Quieting Cordial for children. A mild, safe tonic. 25 cents.

WOMAN AND HOME.

"My dear," said Mr. Gidaker, one evening, as he leaned back in the base-rocker and put his slippers on the fender, "did the thought ever occur to you that there is still much trace of the savage in man?"

"Well, it just has," replied his wife, with a sigh. "I don't believe a day passes that I don't think about that very thing."

"Indeed, my love. But you surprise me greatly, for I never dreamed that you gave much thought to metaphysical subjects. May I inquire what it was that first presented the thought to your consideration?"

"I don't know as I can tell what it was that first set me to thinking about it; but I guess it must have been pretty shortly after I married you. If it were all to be done over again, I believe I would rather be a squaw after all."

"What!" exclaimed her husband, straightening up in the chair and taking off his glasses to look at her: "Louise, what do you mean?"

"If a body has to be a savage, as seems to be the case, and has to live with a barbarian, as the most of us have to do, why it's natural, don't you see, for us to prefer a situation where we can take things the easiest. Now, if I was a squaw, for instance, I wouldn't—

"What are you trying to say, Louise?"

"Don't bother me, and I'll mighty soon tell you. I was only trying to say that if it wasn't for this same savagery, or whatever you call it, that crops out in a man just as soon as you marry him, there'd be nothing to hinder my taking the world 'most as easy as a squaw."

"Tut, tut, Louise; a squaw is a slave."

"Well, ain't I one too, I should like to know? Does a squaw have to patch and darn? No. Does a squaw have to keep on her feet every minute of daylight, and then sit up sewing on buttons and things until her eye-balls ache? Not much she doesn't. Does a squaw have to clean house, and be worried into madness by a chimney that won't draw? Not much. Does a squaw have to stay in the house for months at a time, bending over drudgery till her bones ache, and her heart turns sour for want of a little recreation, change of scene, and fresh air? No. Does a squaw have to sit up by herself half the night four times a week while the head of the wigwam is having a high old time at the lodge? No, sir, she don't have to do anything of the kind. About all she has to do is to boil dog and bead a pair of moccasins once in a while. She may get a few more kicks in the ribs than the white slave, but I suppose she gets used to that and don't mind it much. Yes, hubby, you're right; there's lots of savagery in man yet, and nobody knows it better than his own wife.—Chicago Leader.

THE HEIGHT OF GREAT MEN.

A correspondent inquires of us if there is any truth in the general belief that the leaders of any particular age are large men, "or it is merely superstition?" There is a modicum of truth of it. While there are numerous exceptions, it seems to be a fact that great poets, essayists, scholars and philosophical thinkers are, as a rule, small; while great generals, orators and politicians, those who are engrossed in doing rather than thinking, are, as a rule, above the average size of man. There is a reason for it, those who possess the most vitality are apt to make the biggest noise in the world. Washington was a large man; so were Cortez, Charlemagne and Wellington; so were Webster, Clay, Tom Corwin, Tom Marshall, Lincoln, Chase, Sumner; so are Gladstone, Bismarck, Ferry, Cleveland, James G. Blaine and Gen. Sherman. When men who have won distinction are not tall, they generally make up in breadth, like Bonaparte, Stephen A. Douglas and Sheridan.

The thinkers of the world have generally been small; as Cicero, Aristotle, Bacon, Alexander Pope, Alexander Hamilton, and Oliver Wendell Holmes. The members of the Senate, ever since that body was established, have been, it is alleged, about an inch taller than the average height of American men. Successful American editors have generally been tall men, averaging six feet high and over 200 pounds, as the older Bennett, Thurlow Weed, James Watson Webb, Horace Greeley, Wilbur F. Story, Murat Halstead, Joseph Pulitzer and Charles A. Dana, all fine specimens of full-grown men.

Great orators are almost always large men, and such specimens as Joseph Cook, Henry Ward Beecher, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, Mr. Moody, Roscoe Conkling and Dewitt C. Talmage are familiar to the eye of the present generation of Americans. These orators are not only alike in weighting 225 pounds apiece, but they further resemble each other in possessing a keen sense of both humor and pathos, and being coarse-grained of the earth earthly. If they had not been of coarse texture they would have died young, and if they were not large they would have lacked the physical strength to surpass in the sharp competitions of their time. In New York is is proverbial that the great merchants outweigh their clerks.—Vox Populi.

A GREAT FEAT.

A man from Pine Knob stood watching a performance on a slide trombone. Suddenly seizing his companion's arm, the Pine Knob man excitedly exclaimed:

"For the Lawd's sake, look thar, Lige."

"What's the matter?"

"Look thar, he dun it agin."

"Done what?"

"Why, crowded mo'n ha'f that blamed horn inter his mouth. Did you see that? Wall, I sw'ar."

DEDUCTIVE SCIENCE.—"It am my opinion, Bruver White, dat de world ain't a flyin' roun' in de air like a pin wheel, but sets solid on a rock."

"Ye—yes, dominie, dat may be, but what does dat rock set on?"

"Another rock, in course."

"Well, and what does dat one set on?"

"Bruver White, doan't as' sich jackassical queshuns. Dey is rocks all de way down, fo' shuah."—Judge.

When the youth of the period is at his desk in the store an hour seems about ninety minutes in length, but when he is at his girl's house in the evening its duration does not seem more than fifteen minutes.—Tid bits.

PECULIAR

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to and other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One hundred doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad; no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Be sure to get

FOOD FOR THE BRAIN
Dr. R. C. Fower's Nerve Pills are radically different from every other brain and nerve preparation known in medicine. They are the result of patient, exhaustive research, and have been used with marvelous success by Dr. R. C. Flower in a practice which is the largest enjoyed by any physician in America to-day.
THE SECRET of the wonderful virtue of these pills lies in the fact, that, unlike other preparations, they are neither a stimulant nor a narcotic, but a pure
Food for the Nerves and brain. They strike at the root of nervous and mental disorders, arresting old age, prolonging youth, and maintaining vigorous health and life.
One hundred doses in every bottle. For sale by all druggists. $1 a bottle.

Mother's Hands.

I sometimes ponder, one by one,
On all the tasks her hands have done—
The loaves of bread which they have mixed,
The tops and kites they've made and "fixed,"
The little frozen fingers pressed,
The bleeding cuts with cobwebs dressed,
The burning foreheads laved and soothed,
And tangled locks so gently smoothed.

What frocks and aprons cut and fitted!
What garments pieced, and stockings knitted!
What merry polkas Monday morn
They played with clothing soiled and worn
Upon the sonorous washboard keys,
The suds all rainbow symphonies,
Then wrung, and rinsed, and starched, and dried,
And ironed; baking bread beside—
Just those two small, brown, knotted hands!
I think that he who understands
The work that mother has to do
Could not be aught but kind and true.

If all the garments which she planned,
And cut and finished all "by hand—"
The coats, the trousers, vests and shirts,
The dresses, aprons, sheets and skirts—
Could with her carpets, quilts and spreads,
Her pillows and her feather beds,
Be piled before astonished eyes,
I think they would obsure the skies!

Poor knotted hands, life's sweetest grace
Can find no witchery to efface
Marks of self-bondage, which did hold
You closer than your rings of gold!
And when your countless tasks are ended,
And life's broken spots are mended,
Its raveled ends all found and knitted,
Each dropped stitch to its neighbor fitted,
And you lie still on pulseless breast,
How will you feel the joy of rest,
Who found no time on earth to keep
An idle hour except in sleep.

LITTLE RUTH.

I know I was a selfish old idiot, now, when I look around me and see the mercies given me in my helpless old age, feel the warm love around me on all sides, and realize the desolation my own hand reached forth to grasp; but I was blind to the future in those days when I so nearly wrecked all its happiness.

This was how it happened. After Martha died—my wife, I mean, with whom forty years of happy life were spent—and all my children were dead or married, excepting Ruth, there fell upon me the heavy misfortune that has chained me to this chair or my bed for fifteen weary years. I had been a hard working man all my life—a wheelwright by trade—with a large family to rear, to clothe, to feed, to educate, and, ah me! one by one to bury in the old churchyard, till only Mary, James and Ruth, our baby, were left to me. Mary married and went with her husband to the far west. James took his fortune of a few hard-earned dollars and left us for the golden land of promise, California, and only little Ruth was left us. Then the angel of death came for Martha, and only six months later I was stricken helpless with paralysis.

I am reconciled now to my hard fate, and can sit here happily, glad that my eyesight is still good, my right hand free and that in my old age I have learned to love books, to enjoy reading and even writing, as I never did in the hard working days of my youth. But in those first months of my helplessness, when even to toss and turn in my nervous pain was denied me, my sufferings were simply horrible. No agony of pain or torture of flesh or bone could equal the dreadful pressure upon my strong limbs that held them motionless, dead, in spite of my efforts to move them one little inch. I have fainted with the frightful effort I have made just to lift once the feet that had carried me miles in a day with unwearied ease.

But even in that time of rebellious murmuring, of bitterest repining, there was some consolation. First, there was the house and five acres of land, my very own, free of debt or mortgage, and a small in sum the bank, the interest of which lifted us above actual want. Then I had Ruth.

She was just twenty when her mother died, and others besides her father thought hers the fairest face for miles around. She had the bluest eyes, like the little patches of summer sky, and hair that was the color of corn silk, and nestled in little baby curls all over her head—rebellious hair that would not lie straight under any coaxing, but kinked up in tangles that were full of sunlight. Her skin was white as milk, with cheeks like the heart of a blush rose, and her smile showed the prettiest rows of pearly teeth I ever saw.

She coaxed me from my wicked repinings by coming to me for directions, making me feel that my head was still needed to direct the work, though my feet would nevermore carry me over the doorsill. Then she fitted up for me a large back room that overlooked most of the farm, and had Silas, our head man, lift me up every morning and put me in a deep cushioned chair by the window, where I could see the barn, the poultry yard, the well and the fields of waving corn and wheat. She made me feel of importance by thus giving me the master eye over my little domain; and she brought up her own meals to eat with me in the room where my infirmity held me a prisoner.

You must understand what Ruth was to me or you will never understand the simple story I have set myself to telling you. She taught me to use my right hand without the left; and if you wish to appreciate the difficulty, tie your left arm down for one single hour and see how often it will unconsciously strain at the cords. She brought me books from the village library and opened to my old eyes and brain a field of pleasure never before explored. I had read my Bible and the newspaper all my life; but I never even knew the names of books, now my greatest treasures, till Ruth thought "reading would be company" for me. Little Ruth, even she does not know the world she peopled for me in her loving care for my loneliness.

When she was busy about her housework, her baking, her washing and ironing, she left all the doors standing open that I might still hear her cheery voice as she sang or talked to me. Then when all her work was done, she would put on a clean white apron, over her black dress and sit close to me, stitching busily on the household linen, while I read aloud whatever had most pleased me in my morning studies.

She devised little dainty dishes to tempt me to eat; she put saucers of flowers on my table, that I might cheat myself into fancying I was out doors, as their perfume crept out on the air; she assured me, petted me, I loved her, till even my misfortunes seemed blessings drawing us nearer together.

And when she was all the world to me, all that saved me from misery, John Hayes asked me to give him Ruth for his wife. I could have struck him dead when he stood before me, a young giant in strength, with his handsome burnt face glowing with health, and wanted to take away my one blessing, my only home child.

"I will be a true son to you Mr. Martin,' he said, earnestly. "I will never take Ruth from here; but let me come and share her life and lift some of the burdens from her shoulders."

I laughed bitterly. I knew well what such sharing would be when Ruth had a husband, and perhaps children, to take her time and love from me. But I was not harsh. I did not turn this suitor from my house and bid him never speak to Ruth again, much as I longed to do it. I worked more cautiously. I let him go from me to Ruth; and when he left her and she came to me, all rosy blushes, to tell me, with drooping lids and moist eyes, of her new happiness, I worked upon her love and her sense of duty till she believed herself a monster of ungrateful wickedness to think of leaving me or taking any divided duty upon her hands.

I wept, asking her if she could face her dead mother after deserting her helpless father. I pointed out to her the unceasing round of wifely duty that would keep her from my side, and proved to her that the duties of child and wife must clash, if undertaken under such circumstances as were proposed.

The loving tender heart yielded to me and John was tearfully dismissed. Through the warm autumn months, when the corn ripened and was gathered—when our crops were blessed and the little bank fund was increased by the price of farm produce—Ruth grew very quiet and subdued. She was not sad, having always a cheery word and pleasant smile for me; but the pretty rose tint left her round cheeks, and I no longer heard her singing at her work. When I read the best pages in my books to her, I would see my eyes fixed dreamily on some away thought, her work lying idle, till she awoke with a start at my fretful questions.

For I grew fretful and trying in those days. I wanted her to give up woman's dearest hopes and sweetest affection, and be the same sunshiny Ruth she was before my hand tore away her love dreams. I wanted her to put away all the loving tender ties of wifehood and motherhood, and pass her life in devotion at the arm-chair of a paralyzed old man. And when she complied, with gentle, touching submission, then I wanted her to be the bright, happy girl who had resigned nothing, and who could nurse sweet, girlish fancies, with John for a hero. An unreasonable old tyrant, wasn't I?

The winter came in early that year, and before Christmas everything was frozen up tight and the cold was intense. We piled up coal in the stoves, listed doors and windows— that is, Ruth did the work and I enjoyed the result; but there came one cold day—one Friday—when it seemed as if no coals, no listing, could conquer the cold. Children froze stiff on their way to school that day, and were found, stiff and stark, leaning against the fences. Food froze on the tables. Ask any one if they remember that black Friday, and see if some mother's eyes will not fill as they think of the little scarlet hooded figures brought to their doors, white and rigid, that had lifted rosy, round cheeks for a kiss only an hour or so before.

This cold Friday Ruth hurried through her work in the morning, making my room the warmest place in the house, covering my armchair with soft woolens and moving it near the stove. I would have it face the window, for my glimpse of outdoor life was too precious to resign; but I was not, as usual, near it, for Ruth said there might be a draft.

When all was done indoors I saw from my chair Ruth, with a scarlet cloak and hood thrown over her; going to the well with an empty bucket. She stepped along quickly over the hard, frozen ground, and I was admiring the trim little feet and the dainty figure, when I saw her slide to the two steps that were above the well walls and fall. She had slipped and lay doubled up between the two wooden steps and the rough sides of the well, as if she could not rise. Two or three times her hands clutched the lower step, only to fall back again, as if her limbs would not support her.

And I could only look on, powerless to move to aid her. Oh, the idea of it! To know she was hurt, unable to rise, and I helpless as a log. I screamed and called for help. Silas was somewhere, I could not tell where, and I called loudly for him. I could see, after a time, that Ruth, was growing drowsy with the death sleep of cold. The scarlet hood drooped more and more, till it rested against the well side, and the blue veined lids closed over her eyes. The sight called from me such a cry of agony as I thought must be heard for miles.

It was heard. A moment later John Hayes panting and eager eyed, burst open the door.

"What is it?" he cried. "I heard you calling on the road."

"Ruth! Ruth!" I screamed. "She is freezing to death by the well.

He stopped to hear no more. Out upon the hard slippery ground, down the steps with swift rapid strides, and then I saw him stoop and lift the little scarlet cloaked figure in his strong arms, and come swiftly back, bending his face down over the senseless one on his arm, while hot tears rained down his brown cheeks. He put her on the lounge near my chair, and then dashed out for snow.

"Rub her, rub her?" he said. "I am going for a doctor and for my mother."

Before it seemed possible he could have crosed the lots to his home his mother was with me and lifted Ruth away from the fire to the bed. The doctor came, and the two worked till my heart sank with utter hopelessness before the blue eyes opened again or the breath fluttered through the pale lips.

But it did at last, and John joined me in a feverent "Thank God."

But Ruth had broken her leg, and we knew she must lie helpless for many weeks before she could be our active, bright girl again. It was an appalling truth for me to face, but she was not dead, not lying frozen against the rough well curb, and I could not but feel thankfulness far, far above the pain of knowing her suffering. I was trying to settle it all in my mind; to understand the doctor's words, while Mrs. Hayes and the doctor lifted Ruth to her own room that opened into mine. They were away a long time, and John sat beside me, holding my hand in his, and comforting me as if I had not taken the very hope of his life out of him.

"Don't grieve so," he said gently. "She will live."

"Thanks to you," I said. "Oh John, if she gets well she is yours. Give her your strong arm for life, John, instead of my helplessness. I see to-day where my selfish love has nearly cost her her life."

"Do you mean that?" John asked with a little trembling in his voice; "do you really mean that?"

"I do, indeed. Let her stay here, John. I will not be a burden on your purse, for the house and farm and all I have saved are Ruth's; but let her give me what time and love she can spare from you."

"Gladly," he answered; "but we will not wait till she is well, Mr. Martin. Let me have Ruth for my wife now, to-day."

"With a broken leg, sick, helpless?"

"Does she not need me the more? Give her to me now."

But he had to wait until the bans were called in church three times, though he came to us that day, caring for me with the tenderness of a son, while his mother nursed Ruth. They were alone together, as we were, and they had shut up their house, and come to live with us, never to leave again. For one morning, propped up with pillows, Ruth was dressed in white by Mrs. Hayes, and we had a wedding in the little room. My chair was moved in, and the neighbors came from far and near to hear the solemn words that made John and Ruth man and wife.

And happiness has shed its true light upon our home ever since.

BABY'S NAP.

A mother writes to Babyhood that she has found an unfailing remedy for sleeplessness in children—fresh air. If babies are bundled up well and protected with a sunshade, they will hardly be able to keep their eyes open out of doors and will drop off to sleep quickly. She recommends that the mothers also take refreshing exercise in the open air, saying: "If I failed to be in the open air some time each day, when I was nursing a baby, I could always see the result in increased nervousness and fretfulness in the child." We have seen one baby raised with the happiest results on the plan of taking its naps out of doors all the year round. There is a ridiculous notion that when babies are allowed to sleep in the open air they are apt to be troubled with wind on the stomach. There is no sense or reason in it.

An insurance man happened into the house of a newly-married couple at Flint village and during the conversation urged the husband to take out a policy. The risks were becoming hazardous.—Fall River Advance.

At one time there was silence in Heaven for half an hour, which some men take for a proof that there are no women there. But there are. That accidental silence was caused by the women all happening to be arranging their toilets at the same time, and each had a lot of hairpins in her mouth. Kentucky State Journal.

Strength for To-day.

Strength for to-day is all that we need,
As there will never be a to-morrow;
For to-morrow will prove but another day,
With its measures of joy and sorrow.

Then why forecast the trials of life,
With such sad and grave persistence,
And watch and wail for a crowd of ills
That as yet have no existence?

Strength for to-day—that the weary hearts
In the battle for right may quail not,
And the eyes be dimmed with bitter tears
In their search for light, may fail not.

Strength for to-day—on the downhill track,
For the travelers near the valley,
That up, far up, the other side
Ere long they may safely rally.

Strength for to-day—that our precious youth,
May happily shun temptation,
And build, from the rise to the set of the sun,
On a strong and sure foundation.

Strength for to-day—in house and home,
To practice forbearance sweetly;
To scatter kind words and loving deeds,
Still trusting in God completely.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

POMONA, LOS ANGELES CO., April 15, 1887.

Abundant rains have fallen of late, which insure abundant crops of all kinds. In fact rain between May and November would be considered a calamity rather than a blessing. The great tide of immigration and the millions of money that are pouring in from the East are destined to make Southern California the Mecca to which the wealth of all nations will make a pilgrimage and pay homage, (or rather gold, which is an equivalent for all values in this country). During the past winter, while you have been shoveling snow paths and contending with ice, frost and blizzards, here in this sun-kissed land we have enjoyed the beautiful sunshine, the balmy air, the song of birds, the green fields and flowers, and the only reminder we had that it was winter were the snow-caps upon the distant hills, and the mail that came from time to time through the medium of the eastern press.

The Atchinson, Topeka & Santa Fe railroad now run their trains over the Southern Pacific road from San Bernardino to Los Angeles, but have a road nearly completed of their own running parallel with the Southern Pacific road, about three miles north, and trains are expected to run over it about the first of May. The line of the road is very thinly settled through Pomona valley, and land has been comparatively cheap, but the speculators have got hold of it and are buying and selling at prices that astonish the natives. Every man who had a section of land on the road wanted a station built on his land or heavy damages for passing through, but if they would build a station they would give them the right of way. The consequence is there is to be a station on about every mile and a half of the road through the valley. I will give your readers an idea of how they turn it to account, by noting one or two instances, and they are fair samples of what is being done along the line. Mr. Slauson of Los Angeles, and two other gentlemen bought a tract of land on the line of the road east of the San Gabriel river, surveyed and mapped out a town-site and advertised it for sale on a certain day in the Los Angeles papers. Every lot was numbered and the price marked upon it, and they were to be sold at auction for a choice above the marked price, and the premium money to go for building a public school house at the place, which was named Alosta. The night before the sale the Los Angeles Times says several men stayed in a hallway all night so as to be first at the office in the morning. Before the door was opened a line of speculators was formed and the foremost man was offered $500 for his place. The lots sold faster than they could be checked off and the next day Mr. Slauson said he would sell on the premises. He accordingly took a tent and a table with him, as there was not a building in the vicinity, and in a short time every lot was sold and twenty thousand dollars premium money was set aside for a school house.

An enterprising Pomona man owned a tract of land on the line of the road three miles east of Pomona, and gave them the right of way on condition that they should build a station there. He drove stakes for building lots fifty feet wide, and gave it the name of Claremont. I personally inspected the site before the sale, and the only objects visible were stones, sage bush, cactus and the aforesaid stakes, and the only inhabitants I saw were quail and jack rabbits. A map of the town site was printed, the lots numbered, with prices ranging from $250 to $750. The first day's sale floated $185,000 and the second day every lot was sold, and some of them changed hands two and three times.

All classes of real estate in Pomona have risen from fifty to one hundred per cent in the last sixty days, and all classes of people, including women and the clergy, are buying and selling.

A new Congregational church has just organized here, making the tenth within a radius of half a mile and all of different denominations'. Rev. C. B. Sumner, formerly of Monson, is the pastor, and they hold meetings for the present in the opera house, but will soon build a church. Easter was observed in nearly all the churches and the display of flowers was magnificent, and far beyond the conception of people who raise them in pots and keep them alive through the long winter by the heat from stoves and furnaces. Rev. C. B. Sumner bid off three lots at the town site of Claremont for $1225, and the owners gave a lot for a Congregational church. They expect to build a good sized village there within a year.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, MAY 6, 1887.

QUEEN KAPIOLANI of the Hawaiian Islands has been "doing" Washington this week, and will probably start for Boston to-morrow.

OUT of a dozen New York city boys examined for the Annapolis naval school last week not one passed the physical examination. That is what the cigaret is doing for the boys.

No disrespect to Congress is intended in the announcement that the biggest gas well in the world has just been discovered at Fairmount, Ind., its daily flow being nearly 2,000,000 feet.

THE Connecticut House has passed a bill providing for the permanent imprisonment of incorrigibles, on a third conviction of a crime for which the minimum penalty is two years' imprisonment.

FRIENDS of the late President Arthur have quietly raised a substantial sum of money with which to place a stone sarcophagus over his grave at Albany and a bronze statute in New York city.

MRS. SUSANNA M. SALTER, 27 years old, has been elected mayor of the little city of Argonia, in Kansas, by a two-thirds majority in a population of 500; and Isaac S. Tuppins, a colored physician, has been chosen mayor of Reedsville, Ohio. The world is progressing.

HENRY H. FAXON, who has had experience to know whereof he affirms, declares that the liquor selling can be enforced as well as any other criminal law, and when town officials say it cannot be done it is because "they are either cowards or wilfully indifferent to the trusts imposed upon them."

CAPE COD is a shining example of what may be accomplished in the way of tree planting, over 10,000 acres of her sandy plains having been planted with thrifty forests within 30 years. In Western Massachusetts there are miles of naked hills which ought to be covered again with foliage in the same manner.

JONAS G. CLARK, the munificent founder of the new university at Worcester, proposes to add another million to his original endowment of $1,000,000. The corporators organized Wednesday, choosing Mr. Clark president, and it is intended to have the buildings near enough completion so that the first class can begin its work in October, 1888.

MAYOR O'CONNOR of Holyoke is displaying a refreshing amount of backbone in refusing to sign the necessary common victualers' licenses for the liquor saloons which have not lived up to the law in the past, thus circumventing the aldermen, who have reduced the fees and increased the number of saloons, contrary to the mayor's advice.

THIS is not a pleasant picture which the Manchester Mirror draws of country burying grounds in New Hampshire, but unfortunately it may be said with truth of very many burial places throughout New England:—

> If they had only the bones of a tribe of savages long since extinct, they could hardly be left more uncared for. Decayed and broken trees, briers and brambles, weeds and coarse grasses are their decoration, and dilapidated fences and hingeless gates their protection.

BROTHER MARDEN of the Lowell Courier has "been there" himself, knows all about it, and hits the nail square on the head in this fashion:—

> Whatever else this Legislature has done, it has certainly furnished a new argument for biennial sessions and biennial elections. The looseness with which junketing and picnicking have been indulged in is something quite unusual, and now there is a strong movement for making the annual compensation one thousand dollars. A little wholesome public sentiment will prevent that. Seven hundred and fifty dollars is ample pay for four months' work, and four months' work is ample for all reasonable purposes of legislation, and allow for a good deal dawdling at that.

IT'S all right of course, but it does not look real nice in cold print. The joint committee of the Legislature on public charities went to Worcester in February to inspect the insane asylum, and in the $100 bill for their entertainment at the Bay State House was a $10 item covering Apollinaris water, ale, whiskey and rum. Result: the landlord is now being prosecuted for selling liquor illegally, the city at that time being under the no-license regime. If the bibulous committee men had quietly paid for their drinks instead of asking the state to do it, this unpleasant publicity would have been averted.

WE very much fear that the Republicans in the Massachusetts Legislature are treasuring up unto themselves wrath against the day of wrath, in their treatment of the temperance element in the party, as well as of the party pledges. There are rumblings of dissatisfaction in many quarters, and stanch party organs are sending forth sharp notes of warning against the folly and danger of their course. Says the Greenfield Gazette:—

> Can it not be seen that the battle this fall will have to be fought largely upon the record that Republicans make in the present Legislature? Is it to be supposed that temperance people, who would not have been satisfied with a position any less radical than that taken at the last Republican convention, do not note what is being done? We have it on high authority that "ye cannot serve God and mammon."

And the Hampshire Gazette asks, in view of the defeat of the high license bill:—

> In the light of this action and in the face of this refusal to stand by its pledge, how can this party hope to appeal to the people next fall, with any hope of success? The third party men will say the Republicans are not to be trusted in this matter. Though the mass of the party are in favor of it, there are just enough liquor men in the party to prevent it from carrying out its declared purpose, and the only way to accomplish anything is by independent action. In answer to such reasoning as this, what can be said that will retain good temperance men in the party? We speak thus plainly of this matter now, when it is not too late to apply the proper remedy. No party can live long on violated pledges.

One hundred and fifty men are reported as imprisoned in a coal mine at Nanaimo, on the eastern shore of Vancouver Island, B. C., by an explosion Tuesday night, with little hope of getting out alive.

Gov. Ames has appointed S. Whiton, of the gas commission, savings bank commissioner, in place of Mr. Curry, resigned, and Councilor A. B. Coffin of Winchester takes the vacant place on the gas commission.

An earthquake in southern Arizona, Tuesday afternoon, did considerable damage at Tucson, disarranged several mountain oaks, and started one or two volcanoes.

Parasols are in demand.

Splendid moonlight nights this week.

The ice cart has commenced its rounds.

Farmers are busy with their spring work.

The assessors are around making up their lists.

The sound of the lawn mower is heard in the land.

May basket parties have been numerous this week.

Dr. Flynn has moved his office back to Strong's Block.

Thomas Parkes of Florida spent Sunday among former friends in town.

Baggagemaster Newton, at the Boston & Albany station, is on the sick list.

No attention whatever was paid to the observance of Arbor Day in Palmer.

The high school was closed yesterday on account of the illness of Principal Knox.

Miss Lucy E. Naylor has been engaged to teach in one of the public schools in Pittsfield.

The new road machine has been at work on the streets in this village the present week.

The selectmen have declined to grant sixth class licenses to the druggists of the town.

Thomas Sullivan, on Water street, was slightly injured by a kick from a horse last Friday.

The furniture of the Central street dining rooms will be sold at auction to-morrow at 1.30 p. m.

The Flynt Building and Construction Co. has the contract for a $40,000 stone library at Southport, Ct.

The first lawn party of the season was given at the residence of E. G. Hastings' yesterday afternoon.

The Brown University ball club stopped at the Weeks House for dinner Tuesday, and for supper Wednesday.

The district court has sent 22 cases to the present term of superior court, all of them appealed liquor cases.

John Smith of Thorndike has bought a lot on Pine street, west of Geo. W. Ely, and will build a house thereon at once.

Mr. Royce of Brattleboro, Vt., one of the new proprietors of Forest Lake, has arrived on the grounds for the season.

Mr. Richardson of Springfield will sing tenor at St. Paul's church again next Sunday, and Mrs. Wood is expected to sing alto.

Fred Conant is now assistant baggagemaster at the Boston & Albany station, and W. A. Weld takes his place in the freight house.

The farm known as the "McMaster" farm, east of Palmer Center, will be sold at auction next Thursday afternoon at two o'clock.

E. C. Sexton is to build a new house on the lot just east of his present residence on Park street. It will be ready for occupancy this fall.

The 6.37 express for New York did not reach Palmer till nearly eight o'clock Tuesday evening, owing to a broken valve stem on the engine.

New settees have been placed in the town house. Now if the windows only could be washed, the place would appear a little more civilized.

The legislative committee on agriculture went to Amherst last evening to visit the agricultural college, returning by a special train this afternooon.

The Palmer Water Company has this week extended its line of pipe on West Main street to the "Point of Rocks," and put in another hydrant.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union will hold a meeting in the parlors of the Congregational church next Thursday afternoon at two o'clock.

J. A. Palmer has bought of M. W. French 35 acres of wood land west of the French farm on the Springfield road, and will cut the wood from it at once.

Err Maxwell, living west of the village on the Springfield road, set out nearly 80 trees last Saturday, Arbor day, a pretty good record for a man of his age.

The party or parties who took the fish from Mr. Woolrich's pond at Willoughby Pastures are perfectly welcome to the balance, as the few left look lonely.

About 20 members of Thomas Lodge of Masons paid a visit to the lodge at Brookfield Wednesday evening, and report being most royally entertained by their brethren at that place.

J. J. Moynahan has bought Horace Paine's house on Maple street, and MRS. J. D. Blanchard has bought A. S. Whitcomb's house on Park street, the sales being made through D. F. Holden's real estate agency.

The Patterson Club did not have a very large attendance at its presentation of "Caste" Tuesday evening, but will clear about $15. The piece was well rendered and well received, several of the artists receiving encores.

Landlord Belcher, who has run the Nassowanno House for the last year, will not continue his lease after its expiration on the 10th, but has not yet decided what he will do. The future landlord of the house is not yet decided upon.

F. C. Hatch is having bay windows put on the second story of his Main street block, making two very pleasant and attractive offices, which are to be occupied as soon as completed by Dr. E. E. Hill, the dentist, and J. H. Connor, the barber, now located in Strong's block.

C. L. Alexander, the owner of the brick yards at West Brimfield, has leased a large tract of land at Amherst, and if satisfactory arrangements can be made with the railroads, will commence the manufacture of brick there on an extensive scale this spring, otherwise he will wait a year before beginning operations.

The Western Union Telegraph Company should furnish its Palmer office with a messenger boy. As it now is telegrams are liable to be delivered—sometime. A telegram for a man in this village was recently carried to his place of business, and as he did not happen to be in it was returned to the office and held until he called for it, three days later.

The May breakfast and dinner at the Congregational church last Saturday drew a large attendance, as usual, and this year the net proceeds were larger than ever before, the ladies clearing nearly $200. An excellent bill of fare was presented at both meals, besides which there was a table containing fancy articles of all kinds, prices and degrees of art, some pieces being exceedingly handsome.

The Second Baptist Church has completed its organization, under its recent act of incorporation, by the adoption of a constitution and by-laws and the choice of the following officers: Clerk, C. B. Fisk; treasurer, F. L. Brooks; collector, C. E. Fuller; executive committee, Rev. A. W. Weeks, C. B. Fisk, S. Edgerton, P. M. Shearer, W. Rhodes; prudential committee, the pastor, deacons, clerk, E. G. Buss, F. L. Brooks, Mrs. C. B. Fisk and Mrs. A. W. Weeks.

The district court has placed the cases of Collett, Kedu and Paradise, for shooting in Three Rivers, on file, the costs being paid, and the same disposition was made of a complaint against Peter La Plant, for breaking glass. Saturday, Felix Crevier, for admitting minors to his pool room, appealed from a fine and costs of $17.28. Monday Michael Martin was committed in default of $7.43 for drunkenness. The beer recently seized at Catherine O'Connor's in Thorndike, was found to be of the strength allowed to be sold, and the case was dismissed.

Mrs. Ruth Hawkes, who died at Hartford Tuesday, will be remembered by our older citizens as a resident of this place for many years, her husband, who died some fifteen years ago, having been employed in the carriage shop. Mrs. Hawkes has been living with her daughter in Hartford for a few years past, and was stricken with apoplexy about three weeks ago. The body was brought to Palmer for burial, the funeral being held yesterday. She leaves four children—George, who is lives somewhere in the West, Austin J., of this place, Anna, wife of E. E. Wilson of Hartford, and Carrie, who has been living with her mother at Hartford.

There is a good prospect that the watering cart will not be run this year, owing to the difficulty experienced in obtaining subscriptions to the general fund, some of the wealthiest residents, and some who were most to be benefited, refusing to contribute at all. No wonder the merchants complain of dull trade. No one wants to buy an article which comes off the shelves covered with dust and dirt. The cost of running the cart is about $5 per day, exclusive of water, and if more subscriptions do not come in at once the cart will be sold, and the village will return to its primitive dust-covered condition. After last year's comfortable experience such a result would be deplorable and discreditable.

An alarm of fire was sounded at 11 o'clock yesterday forenoon, caused by the burning of a barn on the Isaac Plumley farm across the river in Monson. The department at once responded, and though out of their limits, reached the spot in a few moments. When first discovered the fire was so far advanced that nothing could be done to save the building, and the hook and ladder company devoted its efforts to saving the adjacent buildings, though the greatest danger was passed when they arrived. The barn contained a quantity of hay, farming tools, and four hogs, all of which were burned. The loss on barn and contents is estimated at $2000, insured for $1200 in the Continental with George W. Ely, and $900 with Taft & Kenedick. A fire had been built near the barn for use in killing hogs, and sparks from this probably fired the barn.

The fire district meeting to-morrow afternoon will undoubtedly call out a large attendance to consider the question of reconsidering the votes to put in a fire alarm and electric lights. A good deal of feeling has been developed among some of our citizens against both projects, and especially against the fire alarm, which, they contend, is entirely unnecessary in a community of this size, with the present facilities in this line. While not prepared to accept this view,—for every moment gained in the early stages of a fire is golden—still, the project might be deferred for a year or so, in the interests of harmony and reduced taxation, although it is understood that the apparatus has been ordered and is due here now. The wisdom of rescinding the electric light vote is very questionable. If the voters did not want this light, they should have been at the former meeting and said so. Now that the district has voted for it, let the vote stand, and try it for a year. Palmer should not be any less public spirited and enterprising than its neighbor, Monson; and it really would be a treat to see our dark streets illuminated once.

TOWN MEETING.

The special town meeting Monday, at which the question of building new high school accommodations was the most important matter to be considered, drew out about 200 voters, the majority of them from Thorndike, and E. G. Murdock was chosen moderator. The motion that the town buy a lot and erect a suitable high school thereon was spoken strongly in favor of by Dr. Smith for the school committee, on the ground that the present rooms are already overcrowded, with a still further number to enter this fall. The Thorndike Democratic club fought the matter bitterly, not so much the building itself as the question of location. Indeed their leaders stated that a building would be readily voted, provided it was located some where besides in Palmer. Some one stated that a committee had been appointed to look up a location, and a suspension of the rules was voted in order to hear from the same. It was finally ascertained that the committee was appointed two years ago, and that no member was present, whereupon they were discharged from further duty. The committee on a soldiers' memorial reported they had plans and estimates of what they considered a suitable building, but as no desirable lot had yet been found, the town was advised to delay further action until such had been procured. The report was accepted, and it was then voted that the whole matter be laid over till the next annual meeting. The school house question was then returned to, and after considerable discussion it was voted that a committee of five be nominated from the floor to look up a suitable location and report at a future meeting, the result being that H. T. Bishop, A. M. Bond, Joseph Kerigan, L. E. Moore and Rev. T. J. Sullivan were finally chosen, every man nominated who was not supposed to be in full sympathy with the Thorndike faction, being voted down at once.

HAMPDEN.

Sewing machine agents are plenty in town.

Mrs. P. Scripture has returned from her Southern trip.

Several acres of woodland were burnt over by fire getting away from men burning brush.

BONDSVILLE.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union met with Mrs. C. L. Holden yesterday afternoon.

Frank S. Talmage, who has been employed by the Boston Duck Co., has severed his connection with that concern.

The Bondsville base ball club expects to cross bats with the Thorndikes to-morrow, being the first of a series of games for the championship of the town.

BELCHERTOWN.

Miss Lizzie A. Blackmer has returned from a two weeks' visit to New York.

M. P. Walker's family are expected at "West View" about the middle of the month.

It is expected that building operations will soon be commenced on the Highland House.

A large number were present at the temperance concert given at the Methodist church Tuesday evening.

BRIMFIELD.

At the First Congregational church last Sunday, 13 were admitted to the church, 11 by profession, and two by letter.

The auction sale of George Bacon on Saturday was not a success, the property being held at prices above the views of the purchasers.

The event of last week was the sale of the personal estate of the late George H. Upham. The sale was well attended, continuing through the day and evening, and the great variety of the collections of a life time were disposed of at much better prices than anticipated.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Farmers are busy planting potatoes.

Eggs are very plenty at 15 cents per dozen; potatoes 75 and 80 cents per bushel.

The familiar form of A. D. King is missed from our local meat wagon, as he in on the sick list. Mr. King has driven a meat wagon in our village almost without intermission for sixteen years, and it is hoped by his friends that his forced vacation will be short.

The long-expected memorial hall law suit has finally been entered against the town in the sum of $3000, and if the case comes to trial, with ex-Gov. Robinson on one side and George M. Stearns on the other, a lively time is anticipated. It is hoped the case may be settled out of court.

WALES.

H. E. Steele comes out with a new horse.

Dimmick Williams has moved his family to Rockville, Conn.

L. A. Fiske and wife of Springfield made a flying visit to friends this week.

N. Stebbins thinks the Scripture should read beware of the young foxes that destroy the fingers.

Mrs. Kate Williams, who has kept a fancy goods store near the Maple Valley mill, has closed up her business.

Supt. Cochran has vacated the parsonage home and taken a tenement on Church street, being more convenient to church.

Mrs. A. J. Dimmick had quite a lot of goods burned in the Palmer depot, but will recover pay from the express company.

The Center schools started up Monday with Miss Pease in the grammar department and Miss Harkness in the primary.

The Vermont sugar makers report a short crop of maple sugar this year, but H. A. McFarland has a nice lot on hand, made for his special trade.

WILBRAHAM.

A. G. Mills is moving into the old homestead on the Springfield road.

Class "80" of Wesleyan academy will hold its third reunion next June.

Newton Lodge F. and A. M., held its regular monthly meeting Wednesday evening.

The Willing Workers met Wednesday afternoon and evening with Miss Carrie Moody.

Miss Eliza Adams has returned from Amsterdam, N. Y., where she has been spending the winter.

Arbor day was observed by planting a soldiers' memorial tree on the lawn in front of the Congregational church.

The rainbow party at Miss Carrie Moody's Wednesday was enjoyed by all present, and the prize for the finest sewing was awarded to Leroy Noble.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Brown with their father, Rev. Asa Bushnell, start next Tuesday for the Thousand Islands, where they will spend the summer.

There will be a meeting of the veterans and citizens at the house of J. C. Moody to-morrow evening at 7 o'clock, to make arrangements for Memorial day.

THREE RIVERS.

Constable E. L. Derby has been presented with a handsome gold badge by some unknown friends.

The steamer has been launched and will be running in a few days. It has been remodeled and looks decidedly more like a steamboat.

The post office (?) building has received a fresh coat of paint and the old fence in front removed. The grounds have been graded, and if the building was raised about two feet it would make a great difference in its looks.

Felix Crevier, who keeps a billiard room, tobacco and candy store opposite the school house, was arrested Saturday night on a complaint of allowing a minor to play pool in his place. He was taken before "His Honor" Monday morning and was fined $10 and costs, which amounted to $17.18. He appealed. It is about time that something was done to keep our young men out of these dens of vice.

Rev. C. A. Amaron, principal of the French Prostestant college at Lowell, who was the guest of P. A. Forte last week, preached at the Union church Sunday morning, and in the evening spoke upon the good work that the college was doing. They are receiving more applications for membership than they can acommodate, and they are establishing schools all through New England, and expect to have one in Ware soon.

THORNDIKE.

A lively runaway, a complete smash-up, and very narrow escape of a team full of children ended last week.

James Loftus will open a fruit and confectionary emporium next week in the old house belonging to his father.

This village would like to trade a substantial watering trough and accompanying mud hole for some milder form of nuisance.

G. B. Bellis, second hand in No. 1 card room, goes to Newburyport to take a similar position in a larger room of Victoria mills.

Redmund and Barry came according to promise, and by pruning considerable were enabled to present "Midnight Marriage" very acceptably.

We are requested to announce a championship game to-morrow between the "Tin Cans" and the "Water Melons"—Captains McCarty and Gay.

Manager Mahoney's place will be hard to fill. The dramatic society lose a great favorite, and rink and opera house will miss his genial presence.

Daniel Sullivan and Lizzie Donovan were married Tuesday afternoon. They were both great favorites and received many tokens of good will.

A grand benefit ball for James McGrath is to be given at Union Hall this evening. Alex Deitz will prompt, and the Thorndike Orchestra furnish music.

Lobsters and shad, with all the attendant good things, merry maids and charming matrons, all assisted to score another grand success at the Congregational May supper.

The Hardly Ables seem to realize it, for they have cancelled their date here, and the Cotton Balls hope to have a game with the Three Rivers club. Stay there, Duck!

One of our well-known business men received a large dose of entirely unfounded abuse last week in a Springfield paper. Such attacks fortunately have but little effect on the intended victims.

WARREN.

The new hotel is receiving the finishing touches.

John Cunningham is building a house on South street.

The Knowles and Sibley case is expected to be resumed next week.

The delivery of milk at the car is changed from afternoon to morning.

Mr. Leman of Petersham has been appointed superintendeut of the highways.

Allen Day was thrown from his wagon Monday, hurting his shoulder very severely.

The ladies of the Congregational church packed and sent a box of clothing to Utah, valued at $100.

Mr. Peterson, the artist, has just completed the 13th portrait in town, and all give the best of satisfaction.

The flower committee of the Methodist church gave a supper Thursday evening in the vestry of the church.

Tax payers are notified to bring in to the assessors true lists of the valuation of their estates previous to May 15th.

S. E. Blair and A. L. Converse attended the reunion of the surviving members of the State Legislature of 1856, held at the Quincy house, Boston, April 29th.

Jerry Shea, who attempted to murder his wife at West Warren, was tried before Justice Tyler, and bound over to the superior court in $2000, and for want of bail was committed to the Worcester jail.

The men who entered Rockwood's store have escaped from their confinement in Worcester, and will probably make their third attack on the store. Mr. Rockwood soon expects to occupy one of the stores under the new hotel, and will not be quite so exposed to burglars.

The death of Hutchens Blair, a native of Warren, which took place Monday, will be a sad blow to the people of West Brookfield as well as his friends. He was a man who was interested in all public improvements. He leaves a wife and two daughters, and has a brother and sister living in town.

Isaac Moore was chosen assessor in place of Mr. Richardson, who resigned. The money to be expended in prosecuting the liquor sellers is left with the selectmen, and it is earnestly hoped by all law abiding citizens that something will be done, as people can hardly be out late at night without being molested by some intoxicated person.

MONSON.

E. P. Newton has been appointed lock-up keeper.

Subscriptions for the watering cart are now in order.

The straw shop operatives dance in Memorial hall to-night.

W. R. Hudson has gone on a fishing and hunting trip to Maine.

William King has purchased of Geo. H. Newton his horse and carriage.

Mrs. G. W. Farrington has been visiting friends in Worcester the past week.

Mark Noble has recently added several new carriages to his livery department.

Street concerts by traveling peddlers seem to be the leading attraction nights.

Rev. Mr. Betts of Palmer will preach in Central hall next Sabbath at the usual hours.

George Smith is showing in G. L. Keeney's window a picture, a sample of his copying.

The household goods of Rev. E. H. Byington were sold to-day at auction at the parsonage.

Fred White has the contract for putting in the heating apparatus at G. L. Keeney's new house.

A fine steel engraving of Guido's "Aurora" has been placed in the new chapel by the academy class of '82.

The selectmen have established a fire department with A. A. Gage, Fred Fay and Rufus Cushman as engineers.

An interesting letter from California, written by a former resident of Monson, will be found on the first page.

It is reported that the $500 appropriated for the enforcement of the liquor law will be used in the employment of spotters.

The singing in the Congregational church for the next year will be under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Lane.

Forty new lots, each twelve by fifteen feet, have been laid out in the cemetery by the selectmen. The price will be $15 a lot.

Dogs got into Frank Johnson's sheep pasture and destroyed most of them. Only two out of thirteen escaped without some injury.

In all probability Monson will have electric lights, as the $400 has been guaranteed, so the appropriation of $700 by the town can now be used.

William Murphy, aged 22, of Monson, engineer of a hoisting engine at the water works at Bath, Me., was killed Wednesday, by falling between the gear and machinery.

The Emmet Social Club will give a concert and ball at Central Hall on the evening of the 20th. Claffey's Orchestra will furnish music, and Alex. Deitz of Springfield will prompt.

The Young Men's Club arranged themselves last Wednesday afternoon in the vestibule of Memorial Hall and were photographed, the machine standing the test without any apparent strain.

The desk room at the National bank is somewhat less than the demand, as business in the National and Savings departments increase, and the matter of an addition to the building is under consideration.

The parents of the boys who practice ball playing on Sundays would do well to have their children "do as Romans do" on the Lord's day, else the district court may take cognizance of the misdemeanor and cause a stop to the illegal practice.

The parishioners and others of the Congregational church have had a regular housewarming almost every evening this week, and the hearty hand-shaking and congratulations of pastor and people seem to be tokens of the best of fellowship and good feeling.

W. J. Ricketts gave a very entertaining, instructive and interesting reminiscence of his experience in army life at the meeting of Marcus Keep Post last Monday evening. Harlow Chapin is to give the next in the series of experiences in the army at the next Grand Army meeting.

The selectmen have appointed the following road agents: District No. 1, North, William G. Meacham, William King, William O. Hovey, Henry A. Ringge, Francis Ferry, M. D. Maloney, Lester Howe, P. S. Anderson, Lee Blanchard, Horace Bumstead, Oliver Bliss, T. G. Carew and Lucius Beebe.

An attractive programme, including piano solos, singing by Miss Mary Feather and C. F. Orcutt, reading by the elocution class and recitations by various members of the school, was given in the academy hall Tuesday evening. This is the second in the series of rhetorical entertainments for the benefit of the senior class.

The council of Congregational churches called to act on the resignation of Rev. E. H. Byington met last week Thursday and voted that the pastoral relation be dissolved. Delegates were present from the First, South and Memorial churches of Springfield, Palmer, Wilbraham, Hampden and Brimfield. Rev. Michael Burnham of Springfield was chosen moderator and Rev. E. A. Chase scribe. The resignation of the pastor, and the acceptance, together with the resolutions passed by the church, were read, after which Mr. Byington stated his reasons for leaving, speaking kindly of the church, but thought it best for both that he should go. A committee was appointed to draw up a report of the council, which they did as follows:

> The council having listened to the documents, including the resignation of the pastor and the action of the church and society, voted to accept and approve their action and to advise the dissolution of the pastoral relation. While sincerely regreting the unfortunate circumstances which induced this resignation, they are happy to commend the Christian action of the pastor and the officers of the church in these circumstances and to rejoice in the entire exoneration of his Christian character by an impartial and able reference. They also gladly indorse the resolutions of the church in appreciation of his excellent ability and faithfulness as a preacher of a pure gospel, a teacher of sound doctrine and as a kind and sympathetic pastor, as a cultured and scholarly man interested in promoting the intelligence of the community and as successful in building up the spiritual triumph of our Lord and Redeemer. The coucil, also, on its own behalf, heartily commends Mr. Byington to the churches as an able and faithful minister of our Lord Jesus Christ. The council sympathize with the church in the loss of a faithful and successful pastor and desire to express the hope with the prayer that another may be soon placed over this ancient church, who shall be even more signally blessed in his ministry, for which the harmony of the church gives full promise.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The annual meeting of the fire department is to be held next Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, when the officers of the department will be elected and money raised for the expenses of the ensuing year. The department was called out to fires but four times the past year. The amount of insurance was $6200; insurance paid $3970. The prudential committee estimate the amount of money needed for the ensuing year to be $5100.

Some of the members of the J. W. Lawton post, G. A. R., assisted by eminent talent from abroad as well as local talent, have in rehearsal the war drama, "Newbern, or the Old Flag" to be given at the town hall, May 19th, 20th and 21st. This play does not portray the horrors of war, but rather gives more of the comicalities of camp life, with songs, etc., as well as scenes in which the love of the old flag is shown as the cause of so many of our boys in blue leaving home and friends.

A train is to run from New York to Saratoga this summer with only one stop, at Troy, distant 148 miles from New York. This will make the longest regular run without a stop on any road in the world.

Maine has been suffering from big freshets the past week, and millions of logs in the rivers have been washed out to sea. The Penobscot river has been higher than ever known before.

Six prisoners, including three Warren burglars, escaped from the Worcester county jail early Tuesday morning by overpowering the watchman.

Thirty seamen, comprising the entire crew, were lost by the wreck of the British steamer John Knox off the coast of New Foundland last Saturday night.

The Fitchburg railroad has added the Boston, Hoosac Tunnel and Western to its possessions, thus heading off any possible opposition in that locality.

An unknown woman killed by an unknown man—such is the verdict of the coroner's jury in the mysterious tragedy at Rahway, N. J., six weeks ago.

Barre rejoices in a handsome new library building and a $5000 endowment fund, all the gift of Henry Woods of Boston, a native of the town.

The reduction of the public debt during the month of April was $13,053,098.

A CARD.—The undersigned having received during the late fatal illness of her husband, L. K. Adams, many favors from various sources, desires to express her grateful thanks to friends and neighbors for their sympathy and services day by day and to members of Palmer lodge I. O. O. F. for their tender interest and helpfulness during his sickness, and for the floral offering furnished by that lodge at the funeral.

Mrs. L. T. ADAMS.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, May 4th, 1887.

Possibly the water gas contest may be renewed this year, for the committee on manufactures has reported that its making ought not to be permitted. But Messrs. Post of Lenox and Scully of Cambridge dissent, and say that one-third of all the gas that is brewed in the United States is this water gas which is prohibited by Massachusetts law on the ground that it is dangerous. Yet it is much cheaper than ordinary illuminating gas, and is proved not to be dangerous.

The Senate has rejected, by a vote of 22 to 11, the bill to make eight hours a day's work for employes of the cities and of the state. Senator Howard of Bristol supported the bill and Senator Hartwell of Worcester opposed it.

The public health committee has reported that the bill to prevent the adulteration of maple sugar ought not to pass.

Only a short debate was necessary to defeat by a large majority the bill for the use of the check list in town meetings.

Adverse reports have been made on allowing saloons to keep open till midnight instead of eleven o'clock, and on preventing the employment of minors as liquor spotters.

It is probable that something of lasting good will come out of the Beverly investigation. The House committee is going to make its examination thorough by putting upon the stand those who took part in opposing the division of the town, and so making the search impartial between the two sides. That is, of course, the only fair way for the committee to do, though it is not likely that those who shouted bribery so loudly at first thought that both sides would be investigated. In England there is a system of "parliamentary agents," and lobbying, as it is practised here in the state house, has been done away with. Of course, it is impossible to frame any law to protect members away from the state house, when they are at their homes or in the hotels. The House report may not be made till the middle of May, for after the evidence is all in it must be sifted and the report prepared.

Gov. Ames had a crowded house at his reception to the Legislature Thursday night. Some 1200 invitations were issued and most of them accepted. Distinguished people from all over the state and out of it were present.

On Friday the Legislature took a trip to the Cape Cod canal to see the great work. It was by special invitation of the town of Sandwich.

The House bill to make a legal holiday of the first Monday of September, under the name of "Labor's Holiday," has passed its final stage in the Senate by 17 to 15. The opposition, finding that it could not defeat the bill, centered its effort on the substitute bill of Senator Hartwell of Worcester to make the bill a holiday of the same grade as Arbor day. That is, the governor should issue his proclamation for the observance of the day as a holiday, and people should regard the proclamation as they saw fit, but the banks and courts and public offices were not to be closed. It was replied that Arbor day, on even this its second year, was but little observed, and that the laboring people wanted a real holiday by force of law, not a sham. Senator Howard of Bristol was the leading speaker for the holiday bill, and Senators Hartwell and Forbes of Worcester were its most earnest opponents. The vote on Senator Hartwell's substitute was as follows:

YEAS. Fletcher, Forbes, Gleason of Worcester, Glines, Hartwell, Jefts, Jordan, Keith of the Cape, Marble, Pillsbury, Sleeper, Wilbur.—12

NAYS. Algar, Cook, Dwyer, Fernald, Gleason of Plymouth, Howard, Jenkins, Jones of Essex, Keith of Plymouth, Kimball, Morse, Newhall, O'Sullivan, Perkins, Roads, Shea, Slattery, Welch.—18.

Senator Fletcher moved to make the day Wednesday instead of Monday, but the Senate quickly voted that down. The bill is another instance of the power which the organized labor associations have with the Legislature.

The Senate on Tuesday passed to be engrossed without debate the House bill to extend the scope of the state board of arbitration, to provide for local boards and to give a regular annual salary of $2000 to the commissioners. This is another labor measure.

Numerous remonstrances are coming in from business firms against regulating telephone rates by law.

An appropriation of $10,000 for the Carney hospital seems likely to go through without opposition. Its managers are to account to the state board of lunacy and charity for the expenditure of the money.

In consequence of the sale of the Boston, Hoosac Tunnel and Western railroad to the Fitchburg road, the petition of the former for the revival of the charter of the Williamsburg and North Adams road was given leave to withdraw in the House on Tuesday without debate. A lively contest was anticipated, for four of the railroad committee dissented from the adverse report, but the sale put an entirely new feature upon the matter.

A little brush in the House Tuesday forenoon resulted in the overwhelming defeat of the attempt to allow deer shooting on Cape Cod on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays in November. It was said that hunting parties from Attleboro, Taunton, Boston and Rhode Island would exterminate the deer in a few days.

By a large vote the House has accepted the report of the judiciary committee that the bill for the incorporation of labor and trade organizations ought not to pass. Mr. Quincy of Quincy defended it, but had no hope of saving it.

On Wednesday afternoon the House had its third debate on the high license bill. Its engrossment was reconsidered and then a compromise scale of license, offered by Mr. Hamilton of Greenfield, was accepted after a long debate. The scale is as follows: First class, $1500 to $500; second and third, $500 to $250; fourth, $700 to $500; fifth, $300 to $150 (brewers not less than $400); sixth, $150 to $50. The sixth class is the druggists' license and only a nominal fee of $1 has ever been charged before. It is expected that the bill will be defeated in the Senate.

A bill was reported in the Senate Wednesday to give divorce jurisdiction to the superior and probate courts.

Ought not to pass has been reported on the bill aimed at the civil service law by allowing civil service examiners to certify the whole list of eligibles and to permit the appointments to be made from that list.

The House has acted favorably on the savings bank bill, after amending it so that the accounts of unknown persons shall be advertised only once in five years instead of once a year.

The Senate has engrossed the House arbitration bill without debate.

LANDON.

The Art Amateur for May gives a striking portrait study in colors by Stephen Hills Parker of a "Norman Peasant," forcibly painted and full of life and character. The remaining designs include a pleasing decorative head by Ellen Welby in brown, a fine study of lilacs, three full-size panels for a hall chest of carved oak, decorations for a fruit plate (plums) and a vase (marsh marigolds), a bird design for a fan, a page of monograms in N, and designs for a stole and other needlework. Several illustrations are given of American pictures at the forthcoming Paris Salon, including a double-page drawing by Henry Bacon, "At the Capstan—Etretat," and a striking dog picture, "Comrades," by Elizabeth Strong. The Solon, the National Academy Exhibition, the Boston Art Museum and the Probasco picture collection are the subjects of interesting articles. The practical topics specially treated are fruit painting in oils, flower painting on china, sketching from nature, and wall and floor decoration; there is also a timely "talk" on fitting up a seaside cottage. The department of "Books Old and New" is unusually interesting to bibliophiles this month, and the whole number is an admirable illustration of the skill and thorough

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from proprietary medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for dyspepsia and liver complaint, and the German syrup for cough and lung troubles, have perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10 cents remain the same size. 47eow

How to Commence

HOUSEKEEPING

WITHOUT MONEY

Enough to pay for the entire purchase at once can be learned at our establishment.

The Means we Have adopted to do this, were commenced twelve years ago at the earnest solicitation of many customers, who did not want to spare the money all at once or wait until they could get it all together before purchasing. It has been in successful operation ever since, increasing in popularity with merchants, professional men, clerks, workmen and the public generally.

People with a Moderate income can furnish their homes without spending a large sum of money at one time; they can select from our immense stocks at the lowest

Board of Health

REGULATIONS.

The Board of Health, appointed by the town of Ware, hereby make and publish, as required by law, the following "Regulations for the public health and safety."

Prevention of Disease.

PRIVIES.

REGULATION 1. No privy vault or reservoir, unless made water-tight, shall be established within TWO RODS of any well, spring or other source of water supply used for culinary or domestic purposes.

REG. 2 All vaults or other depositories for night soil are required to be cleaned twice in each year: in the spring on or before May 15, and in the fall on or before November 15. Disinfectants are to be freely used during the summer months.

All town officers are reminded that the duty of carrying out the provisions of this article—so far as it relates to school houses and public buildings—devolves upon them.

REG. 3. Parties removing night soil from any premises are required to cover their loads with dry earth, or make use of water-tight casks with well fitted covers, before conveying them through any street; and all such refuse matter, wherever deposited, must be covered with earth or other material.

DRAINS, CESS-POOLS, ETC.

REG. 4. The owners or occupants of houses or tenements are required to clean all drains and cess-pools for house slops on or before the fifteenth of May each year, and to use disinfectants in them frequently during the summer. Also to remove the earth saturated by said drains, etc.

If suitable drains or cess-pools for such purposes are not already made for the use of occupants of dwellings or tenements, the owners of such property are required to make such drains or cess-pools, or provide means for the removal of house slops, so that they shall not become a nuisance.

REG. 5. No OPEN drains for the conduction of house slops will in any case be allowed.

REG. 6. No sewer, drain, or cess-pool, not water-tight shall be located within two rods of any well or other source of water used for domestic purposes. No drains for house slops, or other deleterious matter, will in any case be allowed to discharge upon the surface of the ground, or into the gutters or sewers of the public streets as they are now constructed.

REG. 7. No house offal, dead animals, or refuse of any kind shall be thrown upon any street, court, lane, alley, public square, or vacant lot, or into any highway of this town by any resident; no butcher, fishmonger, or vendor of merchandise shall leave any refuse upon any of the places aforesaid.

REG. 8. All families are required to have a properly covered receptacle for swill and house offal, and cause the contents to be regularly removed as often between the first day of May and the first day of November as twice a week, and once a week at all other seasons.

REG. 9. The occupants of houses and tenements are required to remove from the cellars of the same all decayed or decaying vegetables, and everything in a condition to vitiate the air: to admit the light and air to them as freely as possible. Are also advised to use whitewash freely.

SWINE, SLAUGHTER HOUSES, ETC.

REG. 10. No swine shall be kept within the limits of the fire district, except in pens kept dry and regularly and freely disinfected. The Board will order the removal of such animals and pens in any case where they may appear prejudicial to the public health, comfort, or safety. The Board will also order the removal of any privy, hencoop, or any other obstruction that may become objectionable on similar grounds.

REG. 11. No slaughter house, soap works, or abbatoir shall be established or used as such within three-fourths of a mile of the Library building, and none elsewhere within the limits of the town, unless kept free from all obnoxious odors.

REG. 12. No manufacturing, storing of merchandise, or other business giving rise to obnoxious or injurious odors, shall be established within town limits, except in such locations as this board shall assign; an all existing manufacturies, stables, etc., shall use all means available to render them inodorous and unobjectional.

DISEASED ANIMALS, SALE OF FOOD, MILK ETC.

REG. 13. No animal affected with an infectious or contagious disease shall be brought within the limits of the town. No diseased animal, or its flesh, shall be sold or offered for sale; and no decayed, diseased, or unfit meat, fish, vegetables, fruit, or other articles of food shall be sold or offered for sale.

REG. 14. No person shall sell, or offer for sale, adulterated milk, or milk produced by animals diseased or improperly fed; and whoever is supplied with milk which there is good reason to believe is adulterated, or is so produced, shall at once submit the same with the name of the seller to the Board of Health.

VACCINATION.

REG. 15. EVERY CHILD MUST BE VACCINATED before reaching TWO YEARS OF AGE, AND ALL PERSONS EXPOSED TO THE CONTAGION OF SMALL-POX MUST BE IMMEDIATELY VACCINATED. The Board earnestly recommend that all children be vaccinated before they are six months of age, and that all persons be re-vaccinated whenever small-pox breaks out near them, or they are in any way exposed to that disease.

REG. 16. All persons above two years of age who have not been vaccinated, MUST BE IMMEDIATELY.

REG. 17. All incorporated and other manufacturing companies in this town shall cause each new employe to be vaccinated on entrance, unless proof is furnished that said employe has been vaccinated within a reasonable time.

REG. 18. The provisions of Regulation 17 shall also apply to the keeper of the Almshouse in reference to each new occupant.

REG. 19. The School Committee "shall not allow a child who has not been duly vaccicated to be admitted to, or connected with the public schools."

(NOTE.—The Board would call attention to the public statutes on vaccination, Chap. 80, Sec. 51-55.)

Restriction of Disease.

REG 20. Any householder in whose dwelling there shall at any time occur a case of small-pox, diphtheria or scarletina, shall immediately notify the Board of Health of the same, and until instructions are received from the Board shall not permit any clothing, or other property that may have been exposed to infection, to be removed from the house, nor shall any occupant take up residence elsewhere without consent of the Board.

REG. 21. Any physician who may be called to a case of SMALL-POX, DIPHTHERIA or SCARLETINA, shall at once report such case or cases to the Board; and whenever there shall come under the observation of any physican such a number of cases of typhoid fever, or other zymotic diseases, as in his opinion to justify the belief that a considerable epidemic thereof exists, he shall at once report the same to the Board, with such suggestions in regard thereto as may to him seem expedient.

REG. 22. Persons affected with either of the diseases specified in Regulation 20, and all articles infected with the same, must at once be separated from all persons liable to contract or communicate the disease, and none but nurses and physicians will be allowed access to persons sick with said diseases.

REG. 23. No person or article liable to propagate a dangerous disease shall be brought within the limits of the town without the special consent of the Board; and whenever it shall appear to any one that any person or article has been brought into town, immediate notice thereof shall be given to the Board, with full particulars pertaining thereto.

Special Notice.

Careful inspections will be made by the Board of Health, or Inspectors appointed for that purpose, from time to time.

Owners and occupants of houses and tenements ARE ALIKE RESPONSIBLE BY LAW for a full compliance with these regulations.

The Board will reserve the power in special cases and circumstances to modify the requirements of Regulations 2 and 4, in such manner as may in their judgment be advisable or necessary.

DISINFECTANTS.—As general disinfectants dry earth, lime, or chloride of lime serve a good purpose. If wanted in a liquid form, it may be made by adding to each pailful of water three pounds of sulphate of iron (copperas,) and a pint of carbolic acid solution. For use inside of houses a solution of nitrate of lead, one part to one hundred parts of water, is valuable. Cloths soaked in such a solution and hung up in a foul air will quickly destroy bad odors. Chloride of zinc 1 part to 200 parts of water is also recommended.

The Board earnestly ask the co-operation of every citizen in securing the desirable sanitary condition, to promote which, the foregoing regulations are framed. Persons cognizant of the violation of any of these regulations, are requested to inform the Board of Health of the same. This is to be done by a written communication to the Secretary of the Board, defining distinctly the character of such violation, location, and names of delinquent parties if known.

D. M. RYAN, M. D. } Board of Health.
WM. METCALF,
WARE, MASS., April 23d, 1887.

"The Board shall make such regulations as it judges necessary for the public health and safety." "Whoever violates any such regulations shall forfeit a sum not exceeding one hundred dollars.

"The Board of Health office shall order the owner or occupant at his own expense to remove any nuisance, source of filth, or cause of sickness, found on private property, within twenty-four hours, or such other time as it deems reasonable, after notice served as provided in the following section; and if the owner or occupant neglects so to do, he shall forfeit a sum not exceeding twenty dollars for every day which he knowingly permits such nuisance or cause of sickness to remain after the time prescribed for the removal thereof."

"If the owner or occupant fails to comply with such order, the Board may cause the nuisance, source of filth, or cause of sickness, to be removed, and all expenses incurred thereby shall be paid by the owner, occupant, or other person who caused or permitted the same, if he has had actual notice from the Board of Health of the existence thereof." FIRE DISTRICT MEETING.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN, ss. To the qualified voters of Fire District No. 1, in Palmer.

You are hereby notified to meet at the Eastern Hampden District Court Room in said Palmer, on Saturday, the seventh day of May, next, at two o'clock in the afternoon, to act upon the following articles, viz:

ARTICLE 1. To choose a Moderator to preside at said meeting.

ART. 2. To see if the District will vote to reconsider and rescind the votes, or either of them, passed at its last annual meeting, whereby it voted to raise and appropriate the sum of $500 to put in a suitable fire alarm, and to accept the proposition of the Palmer Electric Light Company to light the streets with full arc lights, and established the number of said lights at not less than 10, and the annual rental of $110 per light, and also raised the sum of $1100 for the same.

ART. 3. To see what action the District will take toward allowing a discount on taxes paid on or before September 1st of the current year, and raise such sums of money as may be necessary to cover the deficiency caused thereby.

Given under my hand this twenty-fifth day of April, 1887.

THE BIT OF LAWN.

By the proper preparation of a trifling patch of ground before the door and windows, it is easy to have a pretty lawn for every house in the country, which is just what it should have. Then the use of the lawn mower will keep things in perfect trim. Frequent shavings of the green carpet keep it thick and luxuriant, just as trampling makes the best sod. A lawn mower will do wonders around a house and the country dweller has no excuse for not using it, and using it freely. There is no more attractive setting for a dwelling than a thick carpet of green grass. Shrubs and trees embellish it, though they should not be set out too thickly or too near the windows. It rests and gratifies the eye to look upon it, and the home sentiment is secretly strengthened. Unsightly dooryards ought never to be tolerated, when it is so easy to secure what is permanently attractive and even beautiful. A knot or border of flowers in the grass always looks prettier than in a strip of uncovered soil, and gives to the whole a finish that is indescribable.—Ploughman.

There are some points in the Comstock mines where the workmen encounter a temperature of 115 to 120 degrees, and their thirst is excessive. No ice water is too cold to be swallowed with a relish. Indeed it often does not satisfy, and the miners chew and swallow lumps of ice. Yet it does not hurt them. They often swallow such quantities of ice water that their stomachs will not retain it. The temperature of the station where they go to cool off is about 100 degrees. This temperature —which would almost roast a surface man —appears cool to a man who has come from a place where the thermometer marks 110 to 115 degrees. Where the temperature is 90 the man will feel so cold as to shiver. Often at the cooling-off station the perspiration will cease, and the man will begin to feel very uncomfortable. On leaving and going back to where the temperature is from 115 to 120, as the perspiration begins to start, there is for a minute or two an intolerable itching over the whole body. As each closed pore reopens, it produces a tingling sensation. However, as soon as there is a free flow of perspiration all this trouble ceases, and the man feels quite comfortable and so remains until his whole body—blood, flesh and bones —again reaches a temperature of from 110 to 120, when he becomes wild for ice water and ice.

A hash made of potatoes alone would not be a hash.—Boston Herald.

Oh, yes; it would be a potato hash. What constitutes the source-idea, the predominant characteristic, the indispensable essentiality, the hashness, so to speak, of hash? Our esteemed Mugwump contemporary evidently supposes that it is the idea of mixture, of blended ingredients, and possibly of the second day's cookimg over. But our esteemed Mugwump contemporary is mistaken in this, as in some other things about which it undertakes to speak apodictically. If the Boston Herald had approached the metaphysics of hash more reverently, and had taken the trouble to gather from philological authorities such light as they bestow on the subject, instead of relying upon the vulgar conceptions of the second-class boarding house, it would know that the one essential quality of hash is its choppedupness.—New York Sun.

Henry Bergh, the animal's friend, has issued rules on "How to approach a kicking horse." It appears that the safest way is to hire a man to do the approaching for you.—Norristown Herald.

"I am out of butter," said the lady of the house. "So am I," remarked the fly as he flapped his wings on the edge of the butter plate.—Yonkers Statesman.

What character of Dickins does the new method of doing the hair resemble? All-of-a-twist.—Lowell Citizen.

"Yes, sir," remarked the veteran proudly, "I was in ten engagements—all Southern girls, too."—N. Y. Journal.

"It is the little things that tell," says an old adage. Yes, especially the little brothers.—New Haven News.

A full choir in a church is a good thing. It increases the chants for salvation.—New Orleans Picayune.

BRAIN WORK

requires for its successful and pleasurable pursuit a full, uniform and continuous supply of pure, rich blood to the brain. If, through the torpidity of the liver, the blood becomes foul with bile, the brain is poisoned and over-stimulated with the excess of blood which the irritated heart sends to it with frantic impulses. Dizziness, heaviness, loss of memory, impossibility of application to any kind of work, reveal the truth. To relieve this, and preserve not only the brain but the whole system in the best of working order, Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" will be found invaluable.

A Good Appetite

Is essential to good health; and at this season it is often lost, owing to the poverty or impurity of the blood, and the weakening effect of the changing season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful medicine for creating an appetite, toning the digestion, and giving strength to the whole system.

"When I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I was dizzy in the morning, had a headache, and no appetite; but now I can hardly get enough cooked to eat." EMMA SHEPARD, 1 Coral street, Worcester, Mass.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for dyspepsia, which I have had for the last nine or ten years, suffering terribly. It has now entirely cured me." Mrs. A. NORTON, Chicopee, Mass.

"I must say Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I ever used. Last spring I had no appetite, and the least work I did fatigued me ever so much. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon fel as if I could do as much in a day as I had formerly done in a week. My appetite is voracious." Mrs. M. V. BAYARD, Atlantic City, N. J.

POND'S EXTRACT

VEGETABLE

PAIN DESTROYER.

Hemorrhages. Bleeding from the Lungs, Stomach, Nose or from any cause is speedily controlled and stopped.

SORES, ULCERS, WOUNDS, SPRAINS, AND BRUISES.

IT IS COOLING, CLEANSING AND HEALING.

Catarrh. It is most efficacious for this disease. Cold in the head, etc.

"POND'S EXTRACT CATARRH CURE," specially prepared to meet serious cases, shou'd be applied with Pond's Extract Nasal Syringe.

Rheumatism, Neuralgia. No other preparation has cured more cases of these distressing complaints than the Extract. Pond's Extract Plaster is invaluable in these diseases, Lumbago, Pains in the Back or side, etc.

Diphtheria, Sore Throat, Use the Extract promptly. Delay is dangerous.

Piles, Blind, Bleeding or Itching. It is the greatest remedy known; rapidly curing when other medicines have failed. Pond's Extract Ointment is of great service where the removal of clothing is inconvenient.

For Broken Breasts and Sore Nipples. Mothers who have once used the Extract will never be without it. Pond's Extract Ointment is the best emollient that can be applied.

Female Complaints. In the majority of female diseases the Extract can be used, as is well known, with the greatest benefit. Full directions accompany each bottle.

CAUTION.—POND'S EXTRACT has been imitated. The genuine has the words "POND'S EXTRACT" blown in the glass, and our picture trade-mark on surrounding buff wrapper. None other is genuine. Always insist on having Pond's Extract. Take no other preparation. It is never sold by bulk or by measure. Sold everywhere, Prices 50c., $1, $1.75. Prepared only by Poud's Extract Co., New York and London. nrm4ply42

THORN'S

Hop and Burdock Tonic

STANDS AT THE HEAD OF ALL

SARSAPARILLAS, BITTERS, TONICS,

And Similar Preparations.

It is prepared with the greatest care by I. B. Thorn, who has had twenty years of acutal experience in compounding Physicians' prescriptions, and is warranted not to contain a particle of aloes or any injurious drug.

It is composed of Sarsaparilla Root, Burdock Root, Prickly Ash Bark, Mandrake Root, Golden Seal Root, Dandelion Root and the best Northern grown Hops, the proportions of which when properly combined make the best preparation in existance for curing all blood diseases.

It is the Best Tonic and Invigorator, as Hundreds can Testify.

It cures Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, General Debility, Mental and Physical Exhaustion, and Nervous Prostration.

There is no other preparation like it, and no other that has had the sale in so short a time. Its merits have sold nearly Seventeen Thousand Bottles in the last two years.

How to Commence

HOUSEKEEPING

WITHOUT MONEY

Enough to pay for the entire purchase at once can be learned at our establishment.

The Means we Have adopted to do this, were commenced twelve years ago at the earnest solicitation of many customers, who did not want to spare the money all at once or wait until they could get it all together before purchasing. It has been in successful operation ever since, increasing in popularity with merchants, professional men, clerks, workmen and the public generally.

People with a Moderate

income can furnish their homes without spending a large sum of money at one time; they can select from our immense stocks at the lowest

CASH PRICES.

A small portion down and the balance weekly or monthly, is the means by which we are enabled to sell everyone, without risk to ourselves or publicly to them. It is simply guaranteed payment; we running no risks, are enabled to sell our goods for

Cash or Installment

at a small margin above cost, and as our profits are not dependent upon one branch of the

House Furnishing

business alone, but bearing a proportional part, we can sell you each article as low as goods of like quality in New York or Boston.

The Wife at Home to Her Husband in the Legislature.

[The following lines were written by the late G. M. Fisk, editor of the PALMER JOURNAL, and were first published in its columns May 11, 1867. They have been copied widely, with many variations, and ascribed to various authors. We republish them in their original form, as still appropriate "to be sung every day at the close of the session, till the Legislature adjourns."]

Husband, dear husband, come home to me now,
From the city, and State House so warm;
'Tis lonely without you; why do you not come
And see to the things on the farm?
You told me when you were elected last fall,
If I would but once let you go,
You'd surely return before April was past,
And I really believed 'twould be so.
Come home! come home! come home!
Dear husband, kind husband, come home!

Husband, dear husband, come home to me now,
Come home 'ere the spring-time is through;
The old brindle cow has got a white calf,
And the young lambs are bleating for you;
The hens have been setting a fortnight or more,
They soon will be off with their broods;
The old speckled turkey has stolen her nest
Away in the brakes or the woods.
Come home, &c.

Husband, dear husband, come home to me now,
The garden needs spading for peas;
The boys should be picking up stones in the lot,
And you should be trimming the trees.
When will you get through with bills and resolves,
Stop talking of license and rum,
Of railroads and tunnels, and other such things,
And tend to your business at home?
Come home, &c.

Husband, dear husband, don't write to me more
Of the theatre, lobby and club,
Nor dinners you've eaten at Parker's and Young's,
But hurry away from the Hub.
Yes, hurry back home, your Betsey is sad,
Her heart is so honest and true;
All winter she's slept in the bedroom alone.—
And say, dearest husband, have you?
Come home, &c.

Husband, dear husband, come home to me now,
Come home, while the birds sing in May;
And let not the smiles in the gallery there
Distract you, or tempt you to stay.
The voice of your Betsey is calling you now.—
Come home, for you know what it means;
I'm getting quite nervous about you—come home!
And we will have cowslips for greens!
Come home! come home! come home!
Dear husband, kind husband, Come home!

BETSEY JANE.

Berkshire, May 11, 1867.

THE VILLAGE GOSSIPS.

It commenced by Mrs. Sawyer's arrival at Mrs. Mufflitt's early in the forenoon, evidently in a state of great excitement and full of news. With an air of profound mystery she drew Mrs. Mufflitt from the washtub to the sitting-room and said to her:

"What do you think has happened?"

Now Mrs. Sawyer was well known in Myrtleville as "newsy," as one who lost no opportunities of collecting the most reliable and startling items of information regarding the sayings and doings of the people of Myrtleville. Accordingly Mrs. Mufflitt prepared her mind for tidings of moment.

"What is it?" she asked, drying her hands on her apron and settling down for a good talk.

"You'll not tell I told you?"

"Never."

"Because, you see, it wasn't intended for me to hear. I just happened over to Mrs. Seymour's this morning and Mrs. Kitely was in there, and the door stood open and I couldn't but hear what was said, you know, and—"

"But what was it?" cried Mrs. Mufflitt, as Mrs. Sawyer paused for breath.

"Fred Seymour and Belle Grainger have eloped."

"Eloped!"

"Mrs. Seymour was just telling Mrs. Kitely as I went in. As soon as they saw me coming they begun to talk about the news in this morning's paper; but you can't throw me off the track in that way."

"Oh, my goodness!" cried Mrs. Mufflitt, suddenly, as if some inspiration had seized her.

"You've heard something, too," cried the widow.

"No, but I saw Belle Grainger this morning, quite early, passing by here in the direction of the depot, and she had on her traveling dress and her waterproof, and carried her satchel."

"Going to meet him on the eight o'clock train. Oh, the sly, deceitful thing. Think of her poor father."

"And her sick mother. It is awful. And everybody knows Fred Seymour is as good as engaged to Susy Belknap."

"There, I'll go right over to Belknap's," cried Mrs. Sawyer. Somebody ought to break the news gently to Susan. Poor girl. No wonder they went off slyly."

And away bustled Mrs. Sawyer to find Mrs. Belknap and Susy in the sitting-room sewing. It was a keen satisfaction to tell the news there, for Mrs. Belknap being in delicate health, and possessing ample means, kept a servant and lived in a style of refinement that Myrtleville generally condemned as "putting on airs." To take her "down a peg," as Mrs. Sawyer resolved to do, was a vulgar triumph she enjoyed greatly in anticipation. But in anticipation only. Mrs. Belknap and her daughter received the news in a quiet way, as if the gossip possessed no especial interest for them, asking no question and manifesting no chagrin. The story had grown a little on its way through Mrs. Mufflitt's sitting room, and Mrs. Sawyer had now a full description of the runaway bride's costume, and the train was specified upon which the young couple traveled.

But after Mrs. Sawyer had gone to take her news elsewhere, Susy turned a very pale face to her mother, asking pitifully:

"Oh, mamma, can it be true?"

"I will go over to Mrs. Seymour's, dear, if you wish it."

"Not for the world. If it is true we must never let any one know how we feel it," and her lip quivered. "Fortunately no one knows we are engaged. If it is not true—"

"It seems to come very direct," said Mrs. Belknap, as she drew her daughter into a close, motherly embrace. "Mrs. Sawyer is a terrible gossip and busybody, but I never knew her to be guilty of absolute falsehood."

"Mrs. Kitely is very intimate with Mrs. Seymour. I have heard Fred say they were schoolmates. So it is quite natural for her to be telling Mrs. Kitely and speak of something else when Mrs. Sawyer came in."

"I can scarcely believe it of Fred, said Mrs. Belknap.

"Nor I. And Belle, too, who has been my friend so long, and her only interest in Fred seemed to be in his love for me. Oh, mother! I can't believe it."

In the meantime the story was spreading from house to house, gaining a little here, a little there, as it was repeated. Mrs. Grey had seen Fred Seymour going in the direction of the depot at half-past seven, and it did not seem to occur to the gossips that, as his business was in New York, this was a sight of daily occurrence. Another had always thought Miss Grainger's quiet, modest manners covered a deceitful heart. Some pitied Susy, some congratulated her upon her escape. The young couple were discovered to have every fault the imagination of their accusers could summon up, and Mrs. Belknap and Mrs. Seymour shared the odium and pity with Mrs. Grainger, who certainly should have attended more strictly to the education of her daughter and given her more careful training.

Every mother in Myrtleville was piously thankful it was not her daughter who had so disgraced herself, and the daughters as a general rule, secretly wished they had Miss Grainger's chance, for Fred Seymour was decidedly a beau in Myrtleville, and his mother was known to have property from her husband that would make the young man independent when, in the course of nature it reverted to him. He was engaged on one of the daily evening papers of the great metropolis and considered upright and talented, a man who in time would make a name and position of honor. His attentions to Susy Belknap, though the fact of their engagement had not been published, had been too marked to escape the notice of eyes so prying as those possessed by the good people of Myrtleville, as Susy was a maiden whom any man might be proud to win.

When the four o'clock train came in Mr. Grainger, a little, nervous man, all excitability, was amazed at the sympathizing faces that greeted him on the platform. A chill like death seized his heart. For years his wife had been an invalid, suffering from spinal complaint. Had she died while he was away? White as a sheet he turned to a friend standing near, saying:

"Why do you look so at me? What is the matter at home?"

"My poor friend, have you heard nothing?"

A choking sensation came over the loving husband, but he struggled against it, saying:

"Quick, tell me! What is it, Mary?"

"No. Mrs. Grainger is as well as usual, I believe; but there is a sad story to break to you regarding your daughter."

Wrath took the place of terror.

"My daughter!" cried the little man furiously. "Who dares to carry stories about my daughter?"

"Well—you—see," stammered his friend, "the women folks say she eloped this morning with Fred Seymour."

"Fred Seymour! Why he's head over ears in love with Susy Belknap. My Belle! Why she has been engaged for two years to Lieut. Weston, of the navy, though we did not publish the fact for the benefit of all the tattlers of Myrtleville.

"I am afraid," was the reply, that it was the fact of these engagements that drove them to secrecy and elopement."

"I tell you the whole story is false!" roared the excited father. "I'll make these mischief-makers eat their own words! My Belle, indeed! They must be crazy!"

But on his way home Mr. Grainger met the report in so many places, heard it in such plausible versions, that he entered his wife's room with a very grave face, from which all angry excitement had vanished.

"Where is Belle, Mary?" he asked.

"She went to New York this morning to do some shopping. She will stay at her aunt's to-night."

"Did young Seymour go up on the same train?"

"I suppose so. He usually goes at eight, and that is the train that Belle took.

Mr. Grainger was on the point of telling his wife the whole story, but on second thought restrained the impulse. Sure in his own fatherly confidence in his gentle, modest child, that there was some mistake admitting of exclamation, he said nothing. After all it was a subject of congratulation that none of the busybodies had invaded the sickroom, and he easily made some trivial excuse for going out again. He was determined to sift the gossip thoroughly before alarming the invalid, and his first visit was to the telegraph office at the railway station.

"Is Belle at your house?" flashed over the wires, and was carried to a handsome house in the city.

"Yes. Will be down on the next train," was the answer, for poor Belle imagined there was death or frightful sickness to cause her father's message, when a visit to her aunt was of such common occurrence.

Satisfied on this point Mr. Grainger quietly waited until the train came in, walked up Main street with his daughter on his arm, left her at home, and started out to defy all Myrtleville.

From house to house he traveled with exemplary patience, and followed the snake-like coils of the story, till he faced Mrs. Sawyer, who earnestly assured him;

"Mrs. Seymour and Mrs. Kitely were in the sitting-room when I came in the back way through the kitchen. They were talking, and just as I got to the door Mrs. Seymour told Mrs. Kitely that her son and Belle Grainger had eloped. They saw me just then, and Mrs. Seymour said very carelessly:

"'Here are the morning papers, Mrs. Kitely,' just to change the conversation."

"Pshaw! You misunderstood what was said."

"I tell you I heard her as plain as I hear you now."

"Telling Mrs. Kitely her son and my daughter had eloped?"

"Yes. I'd swear to it on my oath!" said Mrs. Sawyer, as if there were several other ways of swearing, if she chose to take her choice.

"Suppose you step over to Mrs. Kitely's with me."

"Well, I will."

But to Mrs. Sawyer's discomfiture Mrs. Kitely denied the story entirely. Mrs. Seymour had never given her any such information, either in confidence or otherwise. Mrs. Sawyer tearfully persisted in her story; and finally the trio went to Mrs. Seymour's. The hero of the story was by this time at home, and eating his supper when the visitors entered.

It was an awkward story to tell, but it was soon told, and Mrs. Seymour's face was a picture of indignant surprise.

"I!" she cried—"I say my Fred had eloped with Belle Grainger! Why, Mrs. Sawyer, you must surely be dreaming!"

"You said so. I heard you," sobbed the widow.

"Said what?"

"You said distinctly, 'Belle Grainger ran away with my son this morning.'"

At this point Mrs. Seymour burst into a fit of uncontrollable laughter, to the great consternation of her audience. She laughed till she was obliged to wipe the tears from her eyes; when, catching sight of Mr. Grainger's disturbed face, she said with sudden gravity:

"Pardon me, Mr. Grainger, I see I have most innocently caused you a serious annoyance. The truth of the story is this: Fred, as you know, has all the morning papers sent to him on the early train, and many of the neighbors come to borrow them. Mrs. Kitely always likes to see the Sun, and I save it for her; but this morning your daughter stopped on her way to the depot for a paper to read as the rode to the city, and took the Sun. When Mrs. Kitely came for the papers I said to her, 'Belle Grainger ran away with my Sun this morning.'"

"And all Myrtleville has been busy with the scandal Mrs. Sawyer manufactured out of your remark," cried Mr. Grainger. I only hope she will be as active in contradicting as she was in circulating it."

But to this day Mrs. Sawyer persists in declaring that she can't see where she was to blame, after all. Anybody, she is quite sure, might have made such a mistake on the same grounds.

Pretty Susy was not left long in doubt, for Fred, having drawn from Mrs. Sawyer the confession that she "thought it a duty to tell the Belknaps the first thing," hastened over to his betrothed wife, to vent his indignation against all tattlers and mischief-makers, and very soon Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Seymour's wedding cards put the final contradiction to the Myrtleville scandal.

EAT BEFORE YOU DRINK.

"A large proportion of intemperance in the use of stimulants," philosophized a physician in a free lecture to the Buffalo Express, "may be laid to light breakfasts eaten by most people. Breakfast is the most important meal of the day, and sufficient importance is not attached to it in the majority of households. After the long fast, enforced between supper or late dinner and 7 or 8 o'clock in the morning a person in good health should feel hungry, and it is at this hour of the day that the heartiest meal may be eaten with the least probability of bad results. The man who starts out in the morning after eating a hearty breakfast will seldom, unless suffering with chronic indigestion, experience any of the discomforts which might follow a similar meal at any other time of day. The chances are he will also enjoy a happy frame of mind all day; whatever may be his custom, he will find himself with an excellent appetite. Eating creates appetite. The very opposite results will follow the other course in this matter, and the man who has not had a good breakfast will not enjoy a good dinner. I have treated a good many cases of habitual drunkenness, and in a great many of them I have found that the evil practice of tippling was begun to satisfy a gnawing, faint sensation in the stomach in the morning, which was nothing more or less than disguised hunger."

THE PROOF WAS SUFFICIENT.

Winks—"Do you believe the spirits of the departed can communicate with the living?"

Jinks—"Yes, I have had absolute proof of it."

Winks—"You don't say so?"

Jinks—"I suppose you know when I married the present Mrs. Jinks she was a widow?"

Winks—"Yes."

Jinks—"Well some time afterward I went with a friend to see a medium, just for the fun of the thing, you know, and as sure as I'm alive she gave me a message from my wife's first husband."

Winks—"In his writing?"

Jinks—"Oh, no!"

Winks—"Did you see him or hear him talk?"

Jinks—"No, the medium just told me what he said."

Winks—"Nonsense; then what proof have you the communication was genuine?"

Jinks—"He said he was sorry for me."

Countryman (to dime museum freak) "Are you the wild man of the Borneo woods?" Freak—"No, sir, I'm the horned man from the fastnesses of the dark continent. Wantaphotographonlytwentyfi'-cents?" Countryman—"Where's your horns?" "Freak—"I had a headache and took 'em off. The photographs has got 'em on, sir."—New York Sun.

New Every Morning.

Every day is a fresh beginning,
Every morn is the world made new;
You who are weary of sorrow and sinning,
Here is a beautiful hope for you,—
A hope for me and a hope for you.

All the past sins are past and over,
The tasks are done and the tears are shed;
Yesterday's errors let yesterday cover;
Yesterday's wounds, which smarted and bled,
Are healed with the healing which night has shed.

Yesterday is a part of forever,
Bound up in a sheaf, which God holds tight;
With glad days, and sad days, and bad days, which never Shall visit us more with their bloom and their blight,
Their fullness of sunshine or sorrowful hight.

Let them go, since we cannot relieve them,
Can not undo, and can not atone;
God in his mercy receive, forgive them!
Only the new days are our own,
To-day is ours, and to-day alone.

Here are the skies all burnished brightly,
Here is the spent earth all reborn;
Here are the tired limbs springing lightly
To face the sun, and to share with the morn
In the chrism of dew and the cool of dawn.

Every day is a fresh beginning;
Listen, my soul, to the sad refrain,
And, spite of old sorrow and old sinning,
And puzzle forecasted, and possible pain,
Take heart with the day, and begin again.

READING ALOUD.

If you ask eight people out of ten now, they will tell you that they hate being read to. And why? Because from their childhood they have been unused to it, or used only to such a monotonous drone as robbed even the "Arabian Nights" of half their charm. The husband, at the end of a hard day's work, returns home to pass the evening, absorbed in his book, or dozing over the fire, while the wife takes up a novel, or knits in silence. If he could read to her, or if he could tolerate her reading to him, there would be a community of thought, interchange of ideas, and such discussion as the fusion of two minds into any common channel cannot fail to produce. And it is often the same when the circle is wider. I have known a large family to pass the hours between dinner and bedtime, each one with his book or work, afraid to speak above his breath because "it would disturb papa."

But it was not always so. In the last century—even as late as fifty years ago—reading aloud was regarded as an accomplishment, and it was consequently far more frequently found enlivening the domestic circle. There were fewer books, fewer means of locomotion, fewer pleasures of winter nights, outside the four walls of the country parlor.—Nineteenth Century.

NELLIE'S DAILY BREAD.

"Mamma," said little Nellie one day at breakfast, suddenly, "every morning I pray to God to give me my daily bread, but really it is you that gives to me—isn't it?"

"Let us think a moment about that, Nellie," replied her mother. "Where do I get the bread I give to you?"

"From the baker, mamma."

"And he gets the flour out of which he makes it from the miller, and the miller the grain from which he makes the flour from the farmer, and the farmer gets the grain—where does the farmer get the grain my little girl?"

"Why, out of the ground," said Nellie; "don't you remember Uncle George was cutting wheat and oats when we were at the farm?"

"Well, now, suppose that Uncle George put grain in the ground, and God sent no sunshine, and no dew, and no rain, would Uncle George have any harvest?"

"Why, no," said little Nellie looking sober.

"Then, you see, it is God, after all, who gives us each day our daily bread, and when we have a fruitful season and plenty to eat, we ought to be very thankful to kind Father in heaven, who never forgets to give us what we need."

THE BEST.

A man with brick-colored whiskers entered a Harrison street saloon yesterday afternoon, and, leaning one greasy coat sleeve on the mahogany, said:

"Gimme some of the best you've got."

The man behind the bar set out a glass of water.

"What's that?" asked the man with the whiskers.

"That's water," replied the barkeeper.

"What do I want with water?"

"You asked me for the best I had, and there it is," continued the barkeeper.—Chicago Herald.

One of the members of a school committee undertook to sharpen up the wits of the boys by propounding the following question: "If I had a mince pie and should give two-twelfths to John, two-twelfths to Isaac, two-twelfths to Harry, and should keep half of the pie for myself, what would there be left?" There was a profound study among the boys, but finally one lad held up his hand as a signal that he was ready to answer. "Well, sir, what would there be left? Speak up loud so that all can hear!" said the committee-man. "The plate," said the hopeful fellow. The committee-man turned red in the face, while the other members roared aloud.

Mamma," said a small boy the other day, "do little boy angels wear shoes and stockings in the summer time?"

"No, my son."

"Do they go bare-footed?"

"Yes."

"And do they stay out after sundown?"

"I presume so."

"Well, don't the stars tickle their feet when they twinkle?"

The fond mother was nonplussed.—Philadelphia Call.

The number of women who really care to vote is about equal to the number of men who like to put the baby to sleep.—Philadelphia Press.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, MAY 13, 1887.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD'S statue was unveiled at Washington yesterday by the society of the Army of the Cumberland.

RELIC-HUNTING vandals are desecrating the Washington monument to such an extent that there is talk of closing it to the public.

VIRGINIA is unfortunate in being unable to come to any agreement with her creditors in regard to the state debt. The foreign bondholders are somewhat exacting in their demands, and in the present temper of the people repudiation seems quite a possible outcome.

BEVERLY FARMS people raised about $20,000 to help on the division of the town. Beverly folks chipped in $5000 to oppose it with. The biggest purse won. In view of this fact we would suggest that the following well-established maxim be emblazoned on the walls of the legislative halls: "Money makes the mare go."

FIVE months of the session have passed away, and our legislators ought to be home now, but they have just reached the point of giving a hearing on the question of a prohibitory amendment to the constitution. Such irrepressible eagerness in taking hold of the matter surely foreshadows enthusiastic zeal (?) in pushing it forward to a speedy and favorable decision.

AT the meeting of the Republican state committtee in Boston, Tuesday, Emerson Gaylord of Chicopee resigned his position on the committee and nominated as his successor Henry S. Hyde, who is now living in West Springfield, and he was unanimously elected. This will be a pleasant (?) surprise party to the Springfield gentlemen who worked so successfully to defeat his re-election to the committee last fall.

THE center of interest in Boston financial circles just now is Boston and Providence railroad stock, which has gone up to 241. It is believed that the Boston and Maine or the Old Colony managers, or both of them, are after this road. In case the Old Colony folks should get it there might possibly be an exchange of stations between the Boston and Albany and the Providence roads at Boston, thus doing away with the present grade crossing.

GOV. HILL has signed the new holiday act passed by the New York Legislature, which, in addition to the eight full holidays in a year, makes a half-holiday of every Saturday afternoon, thus adding 26 holidays to the list at one stroke. Notes falling due on Saturday will be payable before noon, but falling due other holidays are payable the day after. The test of experience will determine whether labor will be benefitted by the change to the extent that has been argued.

THIRSTY GUESTS of New York hotels were dumfounded beyond measure last Sunday when they made the startling discovery that they could not obtain their accustomed liquid refreshments, for love nor money. Such a condition of things had never been heard of before in the metropolis, and when the full solemnity of the occasion forced itself upon their minds there was a speedy rush for the hospitable shores of Jersey City. Mayor Hewitt proposes that the big hotels shall close their bars on Sunday as well as the less pretentious groggeries, but a great howl goes up, of course, and the Legislature will be appealed to for relief.

VERY likely no member of the Senate or House was improperly influenced in the Beverly matter—there is no evidence to show it—but both branches vote not to reconsider the passage of the division bill, just as they would have voted if every member had been improperly influenced—and right there is where the pinch comes. The lobby has accomplished its desires, and the smell of suspicion is allowed to adhere to the garments of our legislators, whereas by throwing the matter out entirely they would have rebuked and shown their detestation of the methods employed to advance the scheme, and relieve themselves of even the shadow of suspicion. This matter is likely to prove a very uncomfortable boomerang for the Republican party in this state.

MAYOR HEWITT of New York, who is an owner in the Trenton Iron Works, was waited upon recently by some Knights of Labor, not employed by him, who said they had come to "adjust some difficulties" between him and his men. Mr. Hewitt admitted that there were difficulties, the first one being the fact that the works had not paid 1 per cent for several years. He would gladly turn the shops over to the workmen if they would pay the owners 6 per cent, but to do this they will have to reduce their wages 20 per cent, the shops having run behind that much last year. Still, the works would probably keep on running, but if there was a strike they would shut down and stop further loss. His remarks were such a surprise to the men that they went away without saying a word, and the chances of a strike in those works is decidedly slim.

SEVERAL New Hampshire villages have had pretty severe experience with fire this week. At an early hour Tuesday morning the village of Lebanon was visited by the worst conflagration ever known in that part of the state. Some 10 or 16 acres were burned over, every manufactory being destroyed, 80 buildings in all being burned, and some 400 mechanics thrown out of work. The loss amounts to from $300,000 to $500,000. The village had almost no fire protection, but was constructing a $40,000 system of water works. On the afternoon of the same day there was a $50,000 fire at Suncock, and a $20,000 blaze at Bethlehem. About midnight the village of Newton had a severe fire, its business center being burned, at a loss of some $60,000, and on Wednesday a part of the village of New Boston was wiped out, the loss aggregating $40,000.

Work on the Hudson river tunnel between New York and Jersey City was resumed Monday, after a four years' rest.

New Brunswick is suffering greatly from the floods in the St. John river.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Pleasant rooms to rent in Eager's block.

A full line of Keanedy's fancy biscuit just received at Longley's.

Twenty Canada horses just received at Ferry's stables. For sale cheap.

What's the matter with the Baldwin Dry Air Refrigerator? It's all right. Call and see it at H. P. Longley's.

Wanted, previous to May 20th, 100 cords of birch or well-seasoned chestnut wood, at West Brimfield Brick Yard.—C. L. Alexander, Palmer.

Milligan's shoe store, headquarters for summer boots, shoes and slippers. Those ladies' shoes at 25 cents a pair are about all closed out, but many other bargains are offered at very low prices. Ladies, try a bottle of gilt edge shoe dressing.

Circus at S. H. Hellyar & Co's. More excitement there in one hour than in all the rest of the town in a week. Have you seen their new bargains? How they can do it is one of the greatest of mysteries. They must have stolen them or are on the verge of failure is the common remark. Think of selling men's all wool suits at $5. You cannot find their equal anywhere for less than $10. Boys' suits at $1; pants from 25 cents upward. They have over 1500 pairs of odd pants. No store in New England, no matter how large, can show a larger stock at such ruinously low prices. Unlaundered white shirts, linen bosom and wristbands, at 21 cents. Carpets from 20 cents to 85 cents. Better values cannot be found. First quality Hollarn shades with spring fixtures, all colors, at 31 cents. Ginghams, large and small check, 7 cents; commonly sold for 10 cents. Ladies' lace and ribbon ties, 5 cents; reduced from 25 cents. Children's long legged cotton hose, all colors, at 5 cents; great bargain. Ladies' street jackets from $2 upward; some very excellent bargains in these goods. Advertising costs money. Will show you a store full of bargains when you call. Don't miss the circus, as such occurrances are rare. Remember the place. S. H. Hellyar & Co, Main street, Palmer.

The teachers at the state primary school will return from their vacation to-morrow.

Mrs. Jonathan McElwaine has gone to Washington to spend the summer among friends.

The electric lights will be the best eleven hundred dollar advertisement the town has ever had.

The mission band of the Baptist church gave an interesting concert last Sunday evening.

Miss E. V. Foster has been engaged to sing in the Congregational church choir for the present.

Some one has suggested that the post office windows be washed, so as to give the flies a chance.

Rev. F. W. Betts preached at Monson last Sunday, Rev. G. V. Maxham occupying his pulpit here.

Rev. A. C. Hurd of Thorndike occupied the pulpit of the Congregational church last Sunday morning.

The express company's safe which went through the depot fire is back in the office again, as good as new.

The insurance companies have settled the loss on Isaac Plumley's barn burned last week, paying him $910.

Dr. Wilbur has taken possession of the J. D. Blanchard place at Blanchardville, recently purchased by him.

A ball game between the carpet mill and wire mill employes will be played on the park to-morrow afternoon.

Spring can no longer have an excuse for delay—the organ grinder with the monkey was about the streets Wednesday.

A brisk fire burned in the woods near the Glen Wednesday afternoon, and was not extinguished until late at night.

Main street would be much improved in appearance if the great mud hole near the watering tank was done away with.

The no license regime seems to be working well, and very few drunken persons are now seen on the streets. So far, so good.

A. J. Northrop has the care of the track on the agricultural society's park this year, and will have it in good condition by September.

Mrs. J. D. Blanchard sells at auction on the 21st, at the house of Charles Upham in Blanchardville, a large quantity of household furniture.

The children of the state primary school had a May day party yesterday, with a May-pole, dance, etc., a picnic and an extra good dinner for all.

Honora A. Dunn and John Keenor, both of Three Rivers, pleaded guilty in the superior court of illegal liquor keeping, and paid fines of $50 each, with costs.

Mrs. Honora O'Neil will sell at auction next Thursday her 30-acre lot, situated in the northwest part of Monson, about half way between Palmer and North Wilbraham.

S. S. Taft attended the banquet tendered Col. Taylor of the Globe, at Boston Tuesday evening. J. H. Woolrich also received an invitation, but was unable to be present.

C. W. Johnson lost a handsome gray mare by rheumatic fever, Monday. The animal was an excellent carriage horse, and a good round sum had been refused for her.

Local sportsmen have this week placed several thousand young trout in brooks in this vicinity, hoping to reap their reward in the sport of catching them in years to come.

The selectmen have appointed five special police, as follows: In this village, Ole E. Crawford; Thorndike, P. J. Cahill and T. J. Keefe: Three Rivers, P. F. Forte and Frank Lavine.

The warm weather has started the soda fountains going this week, LeGro & Lynde's being the first one running. F. A. Daniels has put in a new one at the Diamond Candy Store.

There is one matter the board of health should not delay action in. If they don't know what it is, a stroll past the sewer openings near the Nassowanno House block will enlighten them any morning.

The grand council of the Royal Arcanum met at Boston Wednesday, Quaboag Council of Palmer being represented by H. P. Longley. George Robinson of Palmer was reëlected Grand Orator for another year.

The New London Northern road is trying the experiment of having its station agents pay off the men in their vicinity, instead of running a pay car. Every Wednesday is pay day at this station, and the weekly pay roll is nearly $600.

It is rumored that one business man in town treats his customers to a drink of whisky—when he thinks it safe to do so. Such a method of advertising would no doubt draw custom of a certain class, especially since the first of May.

Charles Anderson, who died at his home on Baptist Hill last Saturday, at the age of 75, was the father of Mrs. J. A. Palmer of this village, and had been a resident of this town for over 30 years, celebrating his golden wedding about one year ago.

The house and barn on the Porter Smith farm, near Fosket's Mill, was burned Monday morning. The place was owned by Loren G. Reed, and was unoccupied, the fire undoubtedly being incendiary. The loss was $2800, with $1600 insurance.

In the report of last week's town meeting one important point was accidentally omitted—that it was unanimously voted to buy a lot and erect a high school building thereon. There was hardly a dissenting voice to this motion; the "kick" was about the location.

Landlord Weeks is contemplating still further improvements at the Weeks House, and this fall will continue the mansard roof around the southeast corner of his hotel, greatly improving the looks of the structure, and giving him several more fine rooms.

As Palmer's declaration of independence came June 17th, just 17 days before the national declaration, some observation of the day would seem fitting and proper. Last year some notice was taken of the day, and it ought not to pass forgotten this year.

William H. Allen, the well-known hunter and trapper of this town, finished his season's work in that line a short time since, having caught during the past winter 229 fur-bearing animals,—5 foxes, 31 mink, 90 skunks, 103 muskrats,—besides chopping 100 cords of wood.

The town historical committee is corresponding with Rev. J. H. Temple of Framingham, relative to the compiling of the history of the town, and he will probably be engaged to do the work. The histories of Brookfield and Northfield were both written by him.

The choir of St. Paul's church for the ensuing year is made up as follows: Mrs. Jennette Wallace, soprano; Charles B. Richardson of Springfield, tenor; Mrs. Ella Huntley, contralto; Geo. W. Ely, baritone. Mr. Ely has been appointed musical director, and Mrs. W. A. Weld is organist.

Col. S. C. Warriner of Springfield has been engaged to deliver the Memorial Day address for L. L. Merrick post. Charles Upham, E. A. Kirk and George Mills have been chosen a committee to make arrangements for the observance of the day. The Palmer fife and drum corps has been engaged to furnish music.

If you see a man on the street who looks as though he had lost his only friend and never expected to find another, or as though he had just bought 10,000 shares of stock and had them drop 20 points on his hands, you can make up your mind that his wife is cleaning house. P. S. The only men in town this week who have looked otherwise were non-residents.

The street sprinkler started on its rounds Monday morning, much to the gratification of the majority of business men and citizens. The subscriptions have not come in as liberally as they should have, and some have refused to give anything. In front of such residents and merchants the water is shut off, and an unsightly dry spot appears on the otherwise much improved streets.

The interest in the reading room at the library still continues, in spite of the warm weather, as shown by the record last Saturday, when thirty-five visited the reading room alone. It would seem too bad to close it now, but it cannot go on much longer without aid, and those who did not contribute toward the establishing of it may be expected to be called on in a few days.

During the thunder storm last week Thursday night the house of William Nelson, at Tenneyville, were struck by lightning, the bolt entering the room in which Mr. Nelson was sleeping, givingh im and a companion a slight shock. The telegraph poles and the trees near the house were badly shattered. The barn on the Fenton place, owned by John M. Converse, was also slightly damaged by lightning.

The locomotive on Conductor Delahanty's freight train, reaching here about seven o'clock in the evening on the Ware River road, struck a large rock on the track near the Burleigh crossing last Saturday, smashing the rock, but fortunately doing little or no damage to the engine. It was at first supposed that the stone had rolled there, but as there was no place from which it could come, the train hands think it was placed there intentionally, especially as it was on a fill.

Rev. E. A. Perry of Fort Plain, N. Y., who went to that place from St. Paul's church in this village two years ago, has received and accepted a call to the Universalist church at Hudson, N. Y., at a salary of $2000 a year and a parsonage. This church is one of the strongest in the denomination, having a fine building, parsonage, and a fund of $21,000. Mr. Perry will leave the Fort Plain church in a prosperous condition, the pew rentals having largely increased since he went there.

When Express Agent Crawford went for his team at Marcy's stable yard this morning, he found the two Colgrove children, a boy and girl of about 10 and 12 years, asleep in his delivery sleigh, which was stored under a shed in the yard. They had slept there all night, covered with a horse blanket. They said their mother was away from home yesterday, and after vainly trying three or four times to get into the house last night, they at last became afraid to go home, and so camped out for the night.

The committee appointed to locate the electric lights performed their duty Wednesday, placing the lamps as follows: South Main and Dublin streets, South Main close to bridge over Boston and Albany tracks, Main and Walnut, Main and Knox, Main near Point of Rocks, Thorndike and Pine, Thorndike and Pleasant, Park and Central, Pleasant and School, Park street near road to carpet mill. President Heery of the electric light company says he expects to have the lights in working order about June 1st.

The Wright Wire Cloth Co. is so pushed with orders for its wire netting that its weavers will run the machines twenty-four hours per day, with the exception of fifteen minutes for lunch at noon and midnight, and instead of shutting down at 3 p. m. Saturdays, will run until 10 30 at night, making 130 hours per week. A new set of netting machinery has just been put in operation, greatly increasing the product of the works. During the past month they have shipped 2000 bundles of poultry netting, aggregating one million feet, and are also very busy in their wire cloth department.

A session of the probate court was held at the district court room in this village Wednesday, at which the following business was transacted:

Administration granted on the estate of—Georgiana W. Perry, late of Chicopee, Frank W. Perry of Boston, administrator. Wills were proved of—Augustus Wheeler, late of Brimfield, John M. Warren executor; Ferdinand Ohnesorge, late of Springfield, Julia Ohnesorge executrix; Rufus H. Barlow, late of Westfield, Clara S. Barlow executrix; Marcus Chapin, late of Monson, Edward P. Keep executor; Jane Goulding, late of Springfield, Edgar M. Wilson administrator, with the will annexed. Executor's inventory was filed in the estate of—Marcus Chapin, late of Monson, real $2000, personal $891. Trustees account was rendered in the estates of—Seth Cowles, late of Westfield, and Chloe Earle, late of Springfield. Guardian's account was rendered in the estate of Celina Glode of Springfield, minor. Affidavit of notice of appointment was issued to the executor of the estate of Loren C. Pease, late of Wilbraham.

Contractors and builders are exceedingly busy just at present with a building boom which speaks well for the general outlook of business. All the large contractors have enough big jobs on hand to keep them going for some time, while the repairs needed by different house owners keep every carpenter employed. F. F. Marcy has contracts to build four houses for the Ludlow Mfg. Co. at Ludlow, one for John Gay at Thorndike and one for Edward Hallez at Palmer Center. He will also build one for himself at Three Rivers. G. W. Lyman will build E. C. Sexton's house on Park street, a house and barn for Charles Stebbins at Monson, and remodel and build an addition to the house of Mrs. Nesmith, at Wilbraham. W. R. Madison will build two houses at Bondsville, one for John Brown and one for Peter Smith.

In rebuilding the union passenger station a number of changes and improvements will be made from the former arrangement. The little building east of the main structure, occupied as an express office and Boston and Albany baggage room, has been taken down and will not be rebuilt, thus giving an unobstructed view out upon the well arranged grounds. The space formerly occupied by the ticket office, with the broad hall south of it, will be made into a union baggage room, the B. & A. men handling all the baggage. The ticket office will be transferred to a large semi-circular room built for it where the telegraph office stood, next the main tracks of the Boston and Albany, while the telegraph operator will be quartered where the New London Northern baggage room was. It is probable that some other slight changes will also be made, but they have not yet been fully decided upon.

A new time table goes into effect on the Boston & Albany road next Sunday. On the Ware River branch the morning train will leave at 8.10 instead of 8 25, connecting with the Fitchburg at Baldwinsville, and with the Cheshire and Monadnock roads at Winchendon. The afternoon train will leave at 2 15 instead of 2 10. On the main line a train will be put on between Palmer and Worcester, starting from Palat 6.10 a. m., running accommodation to Worcester, and connecting there with the train reaching Boston at 9.15. Returning this train will reach Palmer at 2 05 p. m. The modoc train east, now reaching Palmer at 6.06, will be put back to 6.46, and will not stop between Palmer and Worcester except on such days as it is late enough to fall behind the 7.48 accomodation. On Sunday evenings the modoc for the west will be discontinued, but the train leaving Boston at 3 p. m., arriving at Palmer at 5.30, will take its place, running every day in the week.

The special fire district meeting last Saturday afternoon drew out about 150 persons, something over two-thirds of them being voters. Dr. William Holbrook was chosen moderator. Article third was taken up and a motion made that a six per cent discount be allowed on the taxes paid on or before September 1st, which was carried. A motion to charge interest on taxes unpaid after that date was lost. The records of the last meeting were then read and article second taken up. This article was to see if the district would vote to reconsider and rescind the votes for electric lights and fire alarm, or either of them, and a motion was made to indefinitely postpone the matter, but was amended so as to divide the article, taking up the electric lights portion first. A motion to indefinitely postpone the subject drew out a good deal of argument, for and against, but when it came to a vote the count was 56 to 37 in favor of postponement. The fire alarm question drew out even more talk than the other, and some pretty sharp remarks were made, but it was also set aside indefinitely, 62 to 31, about two hours being occupied in doing up the business.

OUR HIGH SCHOOL.

Mr. Editor:—The facts well stated by "X. X. X." in his article on the high school in your issue of April 29th, must have been a surprise to most of the people of our town. That our schools have been allowed to suffer so long is anything but complimentary to our public spirit. Indeed, it is difficult to believe that we have been so indifferent to the cause of education. That the citizens of Palmer were so, knowingly and deliberately, seems hardly possible. If the people of New England in the past had at heart any one thing, it was education. And to-day the interest of Massachusetts in the intellectual development of her sons and daughters is deep and intense, surpassing even the days of Horace Mann. The Legislature of last year gave the strongest proof of this. For you will remember that it passed, by a unanimous vote of both branches, a bill compelling the establishment, in the large cities, of high schools in the evening in addition to those of the day. Shall Palmer lag behind in the march of education? Shall she now, by a false economy or a culpable indifference, inflict a blow on her schools? Does she wish to proclaim to the world that she alone of the towns of the old Bay State cares nothing for the mental training of her youth?

The necessity of an advanced education to young men and women is greater to-day than ever before. The boys and girls of Palmer should not be handicapped by us in the race for life. To-day we do handicap them, for Palmer does not give her children the same advantages of a high school education that other towns of this Commonwealth give to theirs. I would ask my fellow-townsmen to reflect upon this fact. Is it fair, is it humane, to treat our young people thus? Is it just, is it honorable, is it wise? There can be no apology for further delay. We know, now, the overcrowded state of our schools. If we do not speedily come to their relief, we intend to, and wilfully do cripple them. Have we a single justifiable or valid excuse for our delay? We are not poor. In comparison to other towns whose high schools are a pride, an honor, and a delight, we are rich. It is time that we arouse ourselves from our lethargy. Exhortation in matters of education should not be necessary. Its paramount importance not a single citizen will deny. We cannot afford to neglect the training of our children. We must ever exercise the greatest solicitude over their intelligence. As in the past, so to-day, education is the foundation stone of the state, the bulwark of our liberties, our safety and our hope.

We live to-day in an iconoclastic age. False principles and dangerous philosophies are being sedulously propagated by designing men. Our youth must be protected from the teachings of an untrue social science. We must make our young men too intelligent to become the dupes of demagogues. Let us ever remember that injury to education is an injury to the body politic. The money we expend on schools is our most profitable investment. The children of to-day are the men and women of to-morrow—the citizens of this republic. And can an American citizen, fellow-townsmen, be too enlightened for his important duties? Custodian of the richest political treasures that Providence has bestowed on man, can he be too well qualified intellectually and morally for such a trust?

T. J. S.

BRIMFIELD.

Francis Locke has sold his home and place to Cheeney Newton for $700.

HAMPDEN.

Mrs. Ebenezer Howlett, aged 82, met with a serious accident last week, by being run over by a team and her leg broken just below the knee joint.

BONDSVILLE.

Emelius B. Murdock died suddenly of heart disease Monday morning. Mr. Murdock has done a good business as merchant in this village for 21 years, and has been one of our foremost citizens. He was not feeling well for the past week, but was able to be about. While in his garden Monday he complained of pains around his heart and almost immediately expired. Mr. Murdock was 62 years of age, and leaves three children.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

When Grace chapel society decided a year ago to form a church and call a pastor, the wisdom of the movement was much doubted by some; but the steady advancement and growth in all departments of the church since its formation have abundantly vindicated the action. The Sunday congregation is 10 to 15 per cent larger, and the attendance of the Sunday School and the evening meetings is fully 30 per cent larger than a year ago. A thriving society of Christian Endeavor has been formed, which has about fifty members, and altogether the promoters of the enterprise feel that the results thus far have been all that could be hoped for. The pastor, Rev. M. S. Dudley, is a faithful worker, showing great interest in the people, and is much beloved by all.

WILBRAHAM.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society met at the parsonage Wednesday afternoon.

A valuable colt belonging to Anson Soule was drowned in his mill pond last Sunday.

Rev. G. M. Steele will deliver the sermon on Memorial Sunday in the Congregational church.

A reception was held in Fisk Hall Saturday evening by the senior and junior classes of Wesleyan academy.

Mrs. M. E. Bliss has gone to Canon City, Col., to visit her daughter, Mrs. F. R. Hitchcock, who is quite ill.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallie Brown and the latter's brother, Rev. Asa Bushnell, will spend the summer at Thousand Island Park, N. Y.

Last week Thursday was Prof. Raymond's birthday, and the students at the academy determined to recognize it just a little. A telegram was sent to Springfield for flowers, and after supper the whole school marched to his house and gave him a bouquet of flowers and a purse of money for the benefit of the gymnasium.

BELCHERTOWN.

Miss Ola Dixon is making a visit to her former home, near Carlisle, Pa.

Marcus Barton has purchased the property on North Main street lately owned by Eugene Bridgman.

The high school has been closed for a few days on account of so many of the pupils being sick with the measles.

Miss Bessie Bridgman will make her home at her brother's residence, having returned from a series of visits to New York and other places.

The Congregational church and parish held a meeting last week and voted, 37 to 7, in favor of asking the pastor, Rev. P. W. Lyman, to withdraw his resignation.

H. T. Cowles, a native of Belchertown, has been promoted to the position of cashier of the Amherst National Bank, and his many friends here are pleased with his good fortune.

E. J. Griggs Post, No. 97, G. A. R., has passed resolutions of regret at the prospect of losing from our town Rev. P. W. Lyman, and thanking him for the many acts of kindness he has shown them as a post, as old soldiers of the late war, and as private citizens.

WARREN.

The selectmen have decided to appoint a night watch for the two villages.

The Knowles and Sibley case is not to be brought before the courts, but will be settled privately.

Rev. Mr. Giles, of the Catholic church, will give a temperance address in the town hall next Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock.

Thieves removed a square of glass from the window of Longway's notion store in the town hall block Saturday night, and took a few boxes of sardines.

Rev. Mr. Clark and Mr. A. L. Converse attended the council at North Brookfield, of the First church, Tuesday, to dismiss the pastor, Rev. Mr. Wilder.

The vacancies on the board of school committee, occasioned by the removal from town of Rev. W. P. Blackmer and Rev. W. G. Richardson, will be filled next Monday.

The Christian Endeavor Society held their regular business meeting Monday evening and elected the following officers for the next six months: President Edward Ayers; vice-president, Miss Mary Burbank: secretary, Miss Mary S. Hitchcock; treasurer, E. Spencer.

THORNDIKE.

The bantams are out.

Albert Hurd has returned from Amherst.

James Loftus opened his new store Wednesday evening.

The Thorndike Co. is putting up new sheds at the 4 row.

W. W. Thayer of White Rock, R. I., takes charge of No. 1 weave rooms.

Dennis Crowley accidentally shot himself in the hand this week. Injury slight.

P. D. Phelps has obtained a position with the Otis Co., and removed his family to Ware.

The benefit ball for James McGrath last evening was well attended, and netted a large sum.

The Gilbertvilles are to play the Cotton Balls to-morrow, and will play the Thorndike polo team at the rink in the evening.

Dr. Felton had a fortunate escape from injury yesterday afternoon. His horse became frightened and ran, smashing the buggy to pieces, but the doctor escaped injury.

The game between the Three Rivers and Cotton Balls here last Saturday was a good one for two innings. After this the home team struck a batting streak, and piled up the runs. Score 20 to 5 in four innings.

WALES.

The highways will soon be repaired by by the road commissioners.

The new water fountain is being put up, and will be ready for use this week.

Rev. M. Gordon of the Methodist church preached for the Baptists last Sabbath. The pulpit will be supplied next Sunday by a new man, supposed to be a candidate.

Commission Merchant Cole of New York is spending a few days here among the trout brooks. He will be able to entertain his friends with some fish stories on his return home.

Willie Herring of this place while working in a mill in Stafford caught one of his fingers in a belt last week and had it torn off to the middle joint and the cord drawn out 12 inches from his arm.

The mills have arranged their running time so as to stop Saturdays at noon, which gives the help all the afternoon to themselved. By so doing the help work about 1½ hours a week, but it is a great convenience to them and should be appreciated.

Geo. S. Rogers shows three eggs laid in four days by a Plymouth Rock hen, measuring as follows: One 65-16 x 8½ inches with three yolks, weighing 4½ ounces, one 6 x 7¾ inches, weighing 3½ ounces, and one 5⅞ x 7⅜ inches, weighing three ounces. This hen is in the habit of doing the same thing about twice a week.

THREE RIVERS.

Rev. J. Barber of Fayville, Ct., will preach at the Baptist church next Sunday.

A. L. Haynes, who has been quite sick with pneumonia, is reported as more comfortable.

David Milliken, foreman of the Palmer mill dye-house, who has been quite ill for several weeks, is so far recovered as to be be on the street once more.

Felix Crevier was arrested Tuesday for keeping a poolroom without a license. He was found guilty, but on the promise of discontinuing the business the case was placed on file without date and he was allowed to depart by paying the costs, which amounted to nearly $10. It is about time that such places as Crevier is said to have kept should be closed when the owners have such an influence over minors that they will forge their father's names to permits allowing them to play, and in some cases showing them how they should be written.

The ladies of the Union church will serve a May supper at the vestry of the church next Wednesday evening to which the public is cordially invited. Ice cream will be served to all who wish. In addition to this there will be a fancy table, where articles both useful and ornamental will be sold. Another feature will be a confectioner's stand, where fresh candies of various kinds made by the ladies, will be offered for sale.

WEST WARREN.

A red-hot temperance meeting was held in the Methodist church Wednesday night, and the following resolutions were passed as being the sentiments of the law-abiding citizens.

WHEREAS, at the annual meeting held at Warren, April 4th, 1887, the town voted No on the license question, and appropriated one thousand Dollars ($1000) for the suppression of crime, and at a special meeting April 30th, voted to leave the enforcement of the laws in the hands of the Selectmen. And

WHEREAS, it is evident that the laws in regard to the sale of intoxicants are being violated in this village. And

WHEREAS, we believe the evil of intemperance to be the greatest foe to our moral and material progress as a people, therefore

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that the Selectmen should take prompt measures for the suppression of illegal liquor selling in this village and town.

Resolved. That we for ourselves and on behalf of the temperance people of this community do hereby tender to the Selectmen our co-operation and support in their efforts for the removal of the stigma which now rests upon this town as one where liquor is openly sold in violation of the law.

A committee of seven was then chosen to solicit signatures and to have resolutions then presented to the selectmen at their meeting next Monday. It is about time some move was taken, when a little village like this can show thirty places where intoxicants are sold. The people seem now to have been aroused to the highest pitch, and if the selectmen fail to do their duty measures will be taken to oblge them to do something toward stopping the liquor traffic.

Ellis; treasurer, E. F. Morris.

Is it possible there is a deposit of oil beneath our Main street? Some naturalists have observed of late a very dry spot in the roadway, and the curious are wondering whether rumbling sounds as if of an earthquake have been heard, or whether we have a natural gas well, if developed. The surface of the earth appears parched, and travelers note the peculiar appearance and wonder whether the reflection of plated ware could cause such a result, or the watering cart remedy the defect if a whole souled public-spirited business man should try as others do to combine comfort for customers and citizens with the business.

WARE AND VICINITY.

It is expected the track will be laid on the Central Massachusetts railroad to Ware in a few days, possibly this week.

The Samuel Morse house near the depot has been taken down, as it was on the line of the Massachusetts Central railroad. This was one of the oldest landmarks of the town, and its removal greatly changes the appearance of that part of the village.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, May 11th, 1887.

From our Special Correspondent.

The treasury committee has reported ought to pass on the resolve in favor of the town of Palmer to pay it some $114 for the support of several small pox cases in 1882. Mr. Taft, the town's representative here, appeared both before the Senate and the House committees to explain the resolve and urge the justice of the payment to the town.

A new feature of the Beverly case was the presentation in the Senate Thursday by Senator Marble of Worcester of a petition from leading Worcester citizens, including Senator Hoar, W. W. Rice, Adin Thayer, Mayor Winslow, Ex-Mayor Hildreth, and Ex-Postmaster Pickett, asking that the bill to incorporate Beverly Farms be referred to the next Legislature. They say that more money was raised than could have been used for legitimate expenses, that it has not been satisfactorily accounted for, and that special legislation, sought for by such means, ought not to be granted. A like petition from Haverhill was presented.

The liquor law committee has reported that the bill to turn all liquor license fees into the state treasury should be referred to the next Legislature.

On Thursday, by concurrence of the House with a Senate amendment, the employer's liability bill completed its passage of both branches, except enactment.

On the report of the Bussey bridge disaster, the railroad committee has reported a bill for a thorough inspection of all railroad bridges at least once in two years, and a filing of the report with the railroad commissioners. Three thousand of the commissioner's report are to be printed.

The Beverly investigating committees made their reports in the Senate and House respectively on Friday afternoon and they were postponed to Tuesday for action. Each report finds that no vote of a legislator was influenced by improper means, nor do they find conclusive evidence that bribes were offered,—nothing strong enough upon which to base action. The House report was hastily prepared and is not nearly as valuable a document as the Senate. It condemns both sides for using the same means to secure or defeat the passage of the bill. The Senate report reflects severely upon Senator Slattery and his friend Maher (alias Bennett) for putting up a job together to get Pierce to offer a bribe and show up the affair in the Senate. It looks now as if Slattery would suffer from the investigation more than any one else, in spite of his virtuous attitude at the opening. The House committee make no recommendations, but the Senate committee recommend the passage of a bill to separate public and private legislation and to require all paid agents for the latter to be recorded, under penalty of a fine or imprisonment.

It has been a Beverly week at the State House, and everything sinks out of sight compared with it. Tuesday morning the excitement began in the House with the introduction of Mr. Savage of Taunton of resolutions adopted Saturday night by Forbes & Wallace, Springfield, offer 55 pieces black satin Rhadames at $1, which would be cheap at $1.37½. They also offer a job lot of sunshades at less than 50 cents on the dollar. The prices are $1, $1.25 and $1.50.

"THE WRITER" FOR MAY.

The May number of The Writer, the new Boston magazine for literary workers, will contain: "How I Write My Sermons," by Rev. Dr. Edward E. Hale; "George Sand's Advice to a Young Writer" (a posthumous paper, now first published); "Words, Words, Words," by Robert Luce; "The Law of Libel," by Samuel Merrill; "A Writer's Advice to Editors," by S. W. Foss; "Advice to Newspaper Correspondents; Continuing a Despatch," by William H. Hills; "A Plea for Honest English," by Charles Fiske; "Three 'Pointers' for Novices," "To Reporters and Editors," "Does it Pay to be a Reporter?" "Helpful Hints and Suggestions," a reference list to "Literary Articles in Periodicals," and other interesting matter. Ready May 5th. Sample copies 10 cents; subscription $1. Boston: P. O. Box 1905.

FACTS WORTH KNOWING.

In all diseases of the nasal mucous membrane the remedy used must be non-irritating. The medical profession has been slow to learn this. Nothing satisfactory can be accomplished with douches, snuffs, powders, syringes, astringents or any similar application, because they are all irritating, do not thoroughly reach the affected surfaces and should be abandoned as worse than failures. A multitude of persons who had for years borne all the worry and pain that catarrh can inflict, testify to radical and permanent cures wrought by Ely's Cream Balm.

ENJOY LIFE.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens and oceans, and thousands of means of enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health; but how often do the majority of people feel like giving up disheartened, discouraged and worn out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily find satisfactory proof, that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint are the direct causes of seventy-five per cent of such maladies as biliousness, Indigestion, sick headache, costiveness, nervous prostration, dizziness of the head, palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10c. Try it. 1y46eow

Some Things Learned by Experience.

That a tablespoonful of salt thrown on a coal fire that is low, will cause it to burn up quickly. That you can clean oil cloth with milk and water; while soap and brush will ruin it. That the skin of a boiled egg is the best remedy you can apply to a boil. That you can't cure Rheumatism or Neuralgia without taking Menard's Rheumatic Bullets. That you can buy them of LeGro & Lynde for $1.00 per bottle. eow7

Renews Her Youth.

Mrs. Phœbe Chesley, Peterson, Clay Co., Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouched for by the residents of the town: "I am 73 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lameness for many years; could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and am able to do all my own housework. I owe my thanks to Electric Bitters for having renewed my youth, and removed completely all disease and pain." A Captain's Fortunate Discovery.

Capt. Coleman, schr. Weymouth, plying between Atlantic City and N. Y., had been troubled with a cough so that he was unable to sleep, and was induced to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. It not only gave him instant relief, but allayed the extreme soreness in his breast. His children were similarly affected and a single dose had the same happy effect. Dr. King's New Discovery is now the standard remedy in the Coleman household and on board the schooner.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the perscription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists hroughout the world. Price 25c. a bottle. 1y21

WHAT TRUE MERIT WILL DO.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years, has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of coughs, colds and the severest lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when the diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price, 75 cents, large bottles. 46-eow-1y

FOR SALE BY AGENTS IN EVERY TOWN.

Since 1865 this Fertilizer has proved like Farmyard manure, good for any crop, on any soil, in any climate.

Try it alongside of brands which advertise attractive "valuations," and see if the latter even equal it in their effect on the soil. Any farmer may thus learn to his own satisfaction the doubtful value of "commercial valuations," as against the agricultural value of a good Fertilizer.

ASBESTOS

LIQUID PAINTS.

These paints are in every respect strictly first-class being composed of the best and purest materials obtainable. They have a larger sale than any other paints made in this country or abroad, and, although they cost a trifle more per gallon than any others, they will do more and better work for the same amount of money, owing to their wonderful covering properties, while their superior durability renders them the most economical paints in the world.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPSHIRE, SS. PROBATE COURT.—To the heirs-at-law next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of Timothy R. Collins, late of Ware, in said county, deceased, greeting:

Whereas, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased has been presented to said court, for probate, by Mary T. Collins, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to her, the executrix therein named, and by giving bond without surety or sureties.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Ware, in said county of Hampshire, on the twenty-first day of June, next, at two o'clock in the afternoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said Mary T. Collins is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the Ware Standard, published at Ware, the last publication to be two days at least, before said Court,

Witness, William G. Bassett, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this twenty-second day of April in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven.

Nobody Knows but Mother.

Nobody knows of the work it makes
To keep the home together;
Nobody knows of the steps it takes,
Nobody knows—but mother.

Nobody listens to childish woes
Which kisses only smother;
Nobody's pained by naughty blows,
Nobody—only mother.

Nobody knows of the sleepless care
Bestowed on baby brother;
Nobody knows of the tender pray'r,
Nobody—only mother.

Nobody knows of the lessons taught
Of loving one another;
Nobody knows of the patience sought,
Nobody—only mother.

Nobody knows of the anxious fears
Lest darlings may not weather
The storm of life in after years,
Nobody knows—but mother.

Nobody kneels at the throne above
To thank the Heavenly Father
For that sweetest gift—a mother's love;
Nobody can—but mother.

HOW RUSSELL SAGE CAUGHT THE CASHIER.

"New Year's always seems to me like beginning everything new," said the Hon. Russell Sage, the well-known capitalist. "You know I used to have a bank in Troy, and you know, too, that no bank keeps open on New Year's Day. Now, Canada is not so far away from Troy as it is from New York. The cashier of our bank was a bachelor, and I deemed it my duty to keep a close watch on him for that reason. You see he had no home ties to restrain him, and although a very valuable man to the bank I was somewhat afraid he might be led to forget his duty.

"I must say that there had never been a thing in his conduct that had come to my notice which could be construed as discrediting his integrity. I liked him for his genial ways and for his fine business qualities to a far more than ordinary degree.

"The bank closed one year with big surplus in its vaults and we proposed to begin the new year by extending our dealings in commercial paper, which was a very profitable part of the business. The large amount of ready cash that we had on hand enabled us to surpass the other banks. On New Year's day I got to thinking how prosperous the bank had been, and when I went out in the edge of the evening for a short walk I almost unconsciously turned toward it. Just as I approached it I saw the cashier enter it alone and close the door behind him. It flashed across me at once that the cashier might be on the point of commiting the very act that I had so long feared.

"I waited to see if he would light the gas. He did not do so and I was more than ever convinced that he was engaged in wrong-doing. I had a key and I let myself through the door very quietly. I could then look through the glass-doors directly into the bank. I saw the cashier in the vault and in a moment he came out with a tin box in his hand and retired to the director's room in the rear.

"I knew that the train for Canada passed through Troy in the middle of the night and I determined to confront him. I accordingly rushed forward, and throwing open the door exclaimed: 'Sir, I have detected you!'

"He was just taking a spool of thread and a needle out of the box to sew a suspender button on his trousers."

THE GIRLS.

When there are girls at home, it is an excellent plan to allow each one in turn to assume the responsibility of house-keeping for a certain time. It does not hurt girls to be made to take a measure of responsibility concerning household tasks; far otherwise—it does them immense good. Let them in succession have, a week at a time, charge of the chamberwork, the mending, the cooking, the buying even for the family—all, of course, under proper supervision—and their faculties of reason, perception, judgment, discrimination and continuity will be more developed in one month of such training than in six months of common schooling.

The Portland Oregonian thinks that Americans are altogether too fond of what is merely funny. "As the American people grow in years, numbers and superficial civilization," it says, "they grow Frenchy; their volatility is not the movement of a dashing, tumbling river, with strength in swelling current under all the foam, but it is the fizz of soda water, the crackling laughter of fools. True taste is flung to the dogs; the only thought is how we can be diverted without being compelled to do any thinking or accept instruction. Wit runs to slang, and humor is degraded by being made to draw every dirty little paragrapher's local dog-cart. Sensible people in social life are tempted to be either hopelessly silly in conversation or are silent lest they be laughed at for having an honest, earnest, serious thought about anything on the earth, above it, or under it. 'After me, the deluge' is the cynical comfort of us all, and we spare nothing that is humane or altogether lovely, if there is any chance to giggle over it. We are such a comic, such a 'too funny for anything' sort of a smart people that we have laid our comic hands on everything of good report save one; we have not yet justified Carlyle's grim sarcasm and insisted on having a comic Bible."

A man, with a painful expression of countenance, sat on a goods box. "Are you ill?" some one asked. "No." "Have you lost anything?" "Never had anything to lose." "What's the matter, then?" "I'm sittin' on a wasp." "Why don't you get up?" "Wal, that wuz my first impulse, but I got to thinkin' that I was hurtin' the wasp as badly as he was hurtin' me, an' concluded to sit here a while, 'specially as I am tired. I thought, too, that I ought to be thankful, for this is about the easiest seat that I have had lately."—Arkansaw Traveler.

This is a free country and a man has an inalienable right to be miserable if that makes him happy.—N. Y. Herald.

"GREAT OAKS FROM LITTLE ACORNS GROW" and great benefits ensue from the use of Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," tiny, sugar-coated granules—which obviate the necessity of choking and "gagging" in the attempt to swallow some huge bolus of uninviting aspect and disagreeable effect. Their cathartic action is thorough, yet perfectly gentle, and unlike other pills, they never react towards constipation. In cases of sick-headache, and as a promoter of digestion, they are unsurpassed. By druggists.

PECULIAR

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to and other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One hundred doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad; no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Be sure to get

Rheumatism, Neuralgia.

No other preparation has cured more cases of these distressing complaints than the Extract. Pond's Extract Plaster is invaluable in these diseases, Lumbago, Pains in the Back or Side, etc.

Diphtheria, Sore Throat, Use the Extract promptly. Delay is dangerous.

Piles, Blind, Bleeding or Itching. It is the greatest remedy known; rapidly curing when other medicines have failed. Pond's Extract Ointment is of great service where the removal of clothing is inconvenient.

For Broken Breasts and Sore Nipples. Mothers who have once used the Extract will never be without it. Pond's Extract Ointment is the best emollient that can be applied.

Female Complaints. In the majority of female diseases the Extract can be used, as is well known, with the greatest benefit. Full directions accompany each bottle.

CAUTION.—POND'S EXTRACT has been imitated. The genuine has the words "POND'S EXTRACT" blown in the glass, and our picture trade-mark on surrounding buff wrapper. None other is genuine. Always insist on having Pond's Extract. Take no other preparation. It is never sold by bulk or by measure. Sold everywhere, Prices 50c., $1, $1.75. How to Commence

HOUSEKEEPING

WITHOUT MONEY

Enough to pay for the entire purchase at once can be learned at our establishment.

The Means we Have adopted to do this, were commenced twelve years ago at the earnest solicitation of many customers, who did not want to spare the money all at once or wait until they could get it all together before purchasing. It has been in successful operation ever since, increasing in popularity with merchants, professional men, clerks, workmen and the public generally.

People with a Moderate

income can furnish their homes without spending a large sum of money at one time; they can select from our immense stocks at the lowest

CASH PRICES.

A small portion down and the balance weekly or monthly, is the means by which we are enabled to sell everyone, without risk to ourselves or publicly to them. It is simply guaranteed payment; we running no risks, are enabled to sell our goods for

Cash or Installment

at a small margin above cost, and as our profits are not dependent upon one branch of the

House Furnishing

business alone, but bearing a proportional part, we can sell you each article as low as goods of like quality in New York or Boston.

A Father to His Son.

"Come sit you down beside me," said a father to his son,
When the evening meal was finished and the work of day was done;
"Draw nearer, boy, and listen well to what I have to say;
I'll speak it now in confidence while mother is away.

"I heard to-night, when I came home from working hard all day,
Your mother had been grieved, because her son had gone astray.
I don't believe in beating, for I think talk does more good,
I'll use the simplest kind of words, so as to be understood.

"You're not a man and won't be, boy, for many years to come—
And, if you were, your duty would still lie in your old home—
The home where you first saw the light of day and heard the tone
Of your mother's voice in singing you to sleep when all alone.

"Some children think when old enough to talk and go to school,
They are masters of their actions and beyond their mother's rule;
Believe me, boy, in childhood—and I'll say in manhood—you
Will find the mother always is the wisest of the two.

"I'll say no more—your mother's step I hear upon the stairs—
But bear in mind what I've said, and always in your prayers
Remember her who is your guide in life from day to day—
You'll miss her, boy, and know her worth when she has passed away.

TURNING A CORNER.

Peter Duke, of the firm of Duke & Co., (his only son, Philip, was the company,) was a busy and prosperous man. The firm was making money very fast in the soap line, and desired to make more. He was a plain, honest and hard working man, apt to boast that he had started business with only a hundred dollars in cash, and now had multiplied the original capital by thousands. He spent little time in boasting, however, being too busy in his effort to make the whole world wash itself clean with Duke's Kimolia, as he called his soap, and to force every laundress to use his Konia, a powder whose detergent qualities were well known. Peter did not know the meaning of these words, but they sounded well. He had paid a literary Bohemian $10 to invent him something sonorous. The latter had turned to a Greek English dictionary and found these under the head "soap." Peter was pleased, and so was the Bohemian—with the $10 and a dozen cakes of soap thrown in. The soap itself was good. The aim of an expert soap boiler is to reconcile solidity of structure with a large volume of enclosed water. Some of them increase the weight of the compound by the addition of extraneous matter, but Peter was honest and left out the dirt. His sale of Kimolia was great, and so was the profit.

Besides a son, Peter had a fair daughter, and, next to his soap factory and his shekels, he loved her. And Millicent—her mother, now dead and gone, had picked up the name from an English society novel—was quite a lovable person. She was good-looking, fairly educated and put on good style. Through her school acquaintance and her father's money she went into a very respectable set, and as she looked well, dressed well and talked well, had plenty of pocket money and a prospective portion of some size, and a present tongue of her own, if needed, they forebore to turn up their noses at soap. At first, those who were poor and proud—and proud poverty is frequently insolent—undertook to snub her a little; but she gave snub for snub, and then, leaning against the valuable pile of soap bars, defied them. Whether because of her manners, of her father's money, she had many masculine admirers. Chief among these was Myndert Van Stopel, the great operator in Wall street, whose huge fortune was built up of the wrecks or railways and other corporations. He had met her at Long Branch the summer before, and thought, to use his own words, that she had "a heap of go in her." Myndert, though he prided himself on his noble Dutch ancestry—the first of his forefathers was Cornelius Pietersie, with no Van at all—thought more of slaughtering the bears in "the street." And he had slaughtered them to some purpose. He was 40 years old, short, stout and red-faced, with a loud voice and obtrusive manners—everything but the imaginary, shrewd-looking man of affairs. He had begun as a boy in a broker's office, rose to be a clerk, went from there to the curb-stone, and then to a seat in the exchange, and his wealth was very far up in the millions. He had been too busy to think of marriage, but he had a remarkably fast horse, and why should he not buy a wife? Millicent rather rebuffed his advances, but he knew the value of money and bided his time.

There was a rival in the field. Myndert did not know it, though if he had known it, he would have despised such a competitor. This was Frank Moore, the general manager employed by the firm, who was highly valued because he was faithful, trustworthy and knew all about the work. He had a good salary and a slight commission on the sales of the Konia, which he had invented. Prudent, though not parsimonious, Frank had managed to save some money, and had $20,000 saved in bond and mortgage, beside over $2000 in bank waiting for a good investment. A very good match he might expect to make, but to think of marrying Millicent and a handsome fortune seemed preposterous.

Millicent did not think so. Frank, who came and went a familiar visitor to the house and was a great crony of Philip, had known her since she was a little girl, and in this case familiarity did not breed contempt. The two had a very good understanding with one another, and the senior Duke for a time, was not well informed in the premises. But such things will leak out, and at least the elder Duke heard of it. He bubbled up like the compound in one of his kettles and interviewed his daughter on the matter.

"See here, Milly," he said. "I'm not angry; but I want you and Moore to stop your philandering nonsense. You ough to make a better match. Moore is a very nice young fellow; I own; I'd find it hard to replace him in the factory. But I don't want him for a son-in-law. You ought to look for some one higher."

"Higher, Papa. Do you want me to be married by a son of Anak. Frank's six foot and an inch."

"Stuff! you know what I mean. Don't talk that way to me. There is Van Stopel, who is half crazy over you. Do you mean to give up millions for nothing?"

"Not quite nothing, papa. Frank has over $22,000."

"Twenty-two thousand fiddlesticks! Why! Van Stopel could settle a hundred thousand dollars on you for pin money and never miss it. You must send Moore about his business."

Millicent shook his head.

"What! You wouldn't be married without my consent?"

"Oh, no, papa! I never will: but when I am married, I intend to have my own consent. I have to live with the man, you know, and you don't. As for Van Stopel—well a "woman may not marry with her grandfather!"

"Grandfather! What are you talking about? Van is only 40. Younger than I am; and I am in the prime of life."

"Excuse me, but he is too old for me."

"You are an ungrateful, disobedient——"

"No, indeed, I'm not, papa. I shall not wed with any one against your will—not even Frank. So don't scold, you dear old bear. Just consider—Mrs. Livingstone, 'she gives a treat'—a grand party next month, and I have to go. And I declare I haven't a dress that I haven't worn a half dozen times—almost."

"That means you want a check. How much is it now?"

"Oh! I'll be so economical, papa. Two hundred and fifty will do."

"Two hundred and fifty! That's economy, is it? Well, you shall have the money. I'll send Moore with it. No, I won't; he must keep away. You shall have the money, but not Moore. When he can settle a hundred thousand on you I'll give my consent and not before; and I mean to tell him so. I'll have a serious talk with that young man."

"You are not angry with him, papa, because he has fallen in love with me?"

"No, that shows good taste; but he must have that hundred thousand dollars."

"I think, papa, I would like that hundred thousand dollars and Moore," she said, archly.

"Fiph!" said her father, explosively, and wended his way to the office. When Moore came in with a glowing account of a large sale of Konia he cut him short.

"Never mind that," he said, "I have something to say to you."

And he said it in a way so decided that Frank trembled in his boots. Then he wound up with:

"You've very useful here, and I don't care to lose you. I'll put twenty-five per cent on your salary; but I won't have you turning Milly's head. She has promised not to have you unless I consent, and I have told her that I never will consent until you are able to settle a hundred thousand dollars on her. And I'll keep my word. That is all there is about it. I'll drop the subject, and you drop her."

Poor Frank went out with different spirits than he had when he eame in. A hundred thousand dollars.

Van Stopel called that evening, and, to his great delight, found that not only was Millicent at home, but was disposed to be gracious. In general she avoided him on some pretext, or was freezingly polite, but now she was pleasant and chatty. They were alone together, the father having gone to what he termed the "library," but which was, in fact, his smoking room: for having quite mastered the article "soap" in the encyclopedia, he never troubled the dust covered books. After the weather and such customary topics had been discussed, Millicent suddenly broke out with—

"Oh! Mr. Stopel, I was reading about stocks in the paper to-day. Do explain to me what they do in Wall street, and how they make and lose so much money. I do not understand it all."

Here was a subject on which Van Stopel could not only talk, but talk well. And he did. He explained all about puts and calls and options and margins, buyers' ten days and sellers' five, so clearly that his fair interlocutor did not understand it. But she did not say so.

"I should like to speculate myself. I have $250 and I should like to double it, just for the fun of the thing."

"Miss Duke, you are very fortunate; for just now there is the greatest—that is, I think I know of a stock that will surely (I mean probably) rise to a high—a better figure shortly: and if you entrust your little venture to me, I promise that you shall much more than double it."

"O, thank you! You are so kind. But then you know that I want to deal with a broker myself. That would be charming. If you could only tell me how to do that? Would you, now?" And she beamed on him a bewitching smile that fairly subjugated the great "bull," and tipped his horns with rapture. He smiled in return, hesitated—and the man who hesitates surrenders.

"There are several stocks that are down," he said, "that may go up. I should recommend the "B., S. & W?"

"B., S. & W?"

"Yes—the Barfield, St. Barnaby and Waukeeshaw railroad. It is standing now at 9."

"How am I to go about it, please?"

He told her.

"Dear me! I shall never be able to remember all that. Please write it down for me, will you?"

Van Stopel, still under the fascination, took out his pencil and wrote, while Millicent sat by, expectant. She was at his shoulder, her breath fanned his temples, and he could scarcely write legible, but he persevered.

"Oh, thank you, so much."

"Now," said he, "I have shown you two ways. You can buy either at ten days or you can buy outright. I should recommend the latter. You see your margin will be 10 per cent on the par value which is 100, and not on the selling price, which is 9. Now, if you buy at 10 days, you can only get, say about 22 shares, for you must keep some back to fill up the margin in case it falls."

"Fill up my margin?"

"Yes, I have explained that on the paper. But if you buy outright you will get 27 shares, for you will have no margin to fill and your profits will be more. If you were to put $10,000 or more into the transaction, it would be different. Then a responsible broker, able to carry the amount, either by his own loans or through credit, would treat the stock, which has kept uniform prices so long, as favorably as he would a dividend paying stock, and give you a contract at 5, and possibly at 3 per cent. With your small sum, buy the stock outright. I'll recommend you to a responsible broker; but he is one I never do business with—a good and honorable man, though; but you must promise that you won't tell him or any one else that I sent you."

"I promise that I won't breathe it—not even to father."

Millicent played the piano for him—she played fairly; and sang for him—she sang well. Van Stopel was in the seventh heaven, and was on the verge of proposing right then and there, but he lacked courage. He left, however, in an ecstacy of delight, but it did not last long. He was meditating one of his great strokes of finance, add that soon resumed possession of his mind to the exclusion of everything else.

The next day, while the elder Duke was at the factory, Frank was at the house, a note having been brought him. Milly met him, beamingly.

"Frank," she cried, "do you want one hundred thousand dollars?"

"Do I, Milly? Don't I, the worst kind." And he told her what her father had said.

"He said the same to me, Frank. Can you realize on that mortgage of yours?"

"No, I can't because I have. It was all paid last week, and I am looking around for a new investment in one lump if I can."

A long conversation ensued, and Milly gave her views with great energy and decision.

"Has any one given you any information that makes you so confident?"

"I promised not to tell."

"May be old Van Stopel——"

"Ask me no more questions."

"Um! it is a great risk, after all. Suppose it were to keep going down?"

"I've written on this paper what you are to do then. In fact, here are your whole directions."

"But how do you know—how did you learn?"

"Don't 'but' me, Frank. We're not married, and I'm your master now. Take two hundred and fifty from me, and put it in the pool."

The Barfield, St. Barnaby and Waukeeshaw was one of those railroads begun when everything was at a paper value, that ran from Barfield, which is next to nowhere, to Waukeeshaw, which was about the same kind of a place, with a branch to St. Barnaby, an out of the way spot. It was a hundred miles long, with its branch.

Other railroads fought it and refused connection; it was heavily mortgaged; its expenses a little over balanced its receipts at times, and it stood at 9, nominal at that, for two years. Nobody wanted it, in fact, at any price. That it would ever rise seemed improbable, if not impossible, and two days after, Moore had secured a contract at 5 per cent; and bought at 9¾ buyer 10 days, the stock figured at 8. Some one had found out the purchase and was bearing. He had to fill up, and he grew frightened. He couldn't sleep well. Milly whose little balance of 50 was drawn on, as she insisted it should be, was sanguine. She did not believe in Van Stopel as a lover, but she had great confidence in him as an operator in stocks.

It leaked out that all of the leading brokers had contracts on hand to deliver large amounts of stock, and the bears went to work. But suddenly it was known that all the shares, barring a hundred or so, were locked up. Then came a startling rumor, as the stock went up to 20, 30, 40, anything you please, that Van Stopel was behind the scenes pulling the strings.

Wall street raved. It was a corner.

Now, a corner is a two-edged sword, and keen as a razor, and unless managed dexterously it cuts both ways. A gang of brokers in the face of ruin are like bucks at bay. They are dangerous. But Van Stopel was master of his art. He did not desire to ruin anybody, if the result was to destroy his profits. With a noble magnanimity not properly appreciated by this evil generation he compromised at 50. His gains only amounted to a few millions. The street breathed easier. Moore, who did the same thing—had to in fact, for when the lion roars the cat cries—breathed very fast with astonishment.

The day after all was over Peter Duke come into the counting room and examined the letters of the morning. Suddenly he tapped his bell and sent for Moore, but the manager had gone to Wall street.

"What takes him there? Send him in when he comes," and at the word, Moore entered. "Oh, you're here, are you! I have a letter here from Jenkins. How did that last invoice of fat turn out!"

"Lovely, sir; lovely. Everything is lovely, and the goose——"

"What is the matter with you, Moore? you seem excited?"

"Do I? So I am.

The old soap boiler turned his chair around and gazed on the young man, who went on with his talk.

"Didn't you say, sir, that I could have Miss Millicent whenever I was able to settle $100,000 on her?"

"Of course I did, but stop nonsense and go to business."

"What do you want?"

Frank thrust a bank book in the old man's hand. Mr. Duke opened it and looked up in astonishment.

"Nassau bank! a hundred and eighty odd thousand! Why, where did you get it?"

"Bought B. S. and W. buyer 10 and so on."

"Gambling in stocks, and the firm's money going through your hands."

"I beg your pardon, Mr. Duke, but I used my own money. I never was in the street before, and I shan't go again."

And then he told the story of his venture, and the great stroke of the great operator.

"But how did you know? Did he take you in?"

"No, but"—he was going to say—"Milly took him in," but he didn't. He merely added, "I had a hint from Milly."

Duke whistled, and then he laughed. [Gentle reader, sir or madam, don't interrupt me by asserting that Milly's trick was bad and the whole set were plunderers. I am telling a story, not discussing a question of morals.]

"You'll keep your promise?" inquired Moore, anxiously.

"My daughter shall never marry a manager of a soap works."

"But you said——," exclaimed the couple.

"Of course I said, and I say now, you are discharged as manager."

"Frank's countenance fell and Milly looked reproach.

"I can't get along very well without you, and I'll compromise," said the duke, with a twinkle in his eye. Philip has one-fourth interest in the concern. I'll let you have another fourth the day you settle a hundred thousand on Milly. She shan't marry a mere manager; but I have no objection to a partner in the firm as a son-in-law."

A HORSE STORY.

On Madison street one day I paused to pat the nose of a beautiful horse which stood by the curb and to commiserate his misfortune. For this beautiful animal, though sleek of coat and shapely in body and limb, was apparently suffering most excruciating torture. His head had been checked inhumanely high, and the cruel bit, drawing tightly in his mouth, disfigured an animal face of unusual charm and intelligence. I was just fancying that the horse had begun to understand and appreciate my words of sympathy, when the lady who sat in the carriage holding the reins fumbled in her pocket, produced a lump of white sugar, and asked me to give it to the horse.

"He is very fond of sugar," she explained, "and I have quite won his heart by feeding it to him. I always carry sugar in my pocket while out driving, and give him a lump at every opportunity. I never knew a horse to be so fond of sugar. Will you please give him another lump?"

"Certainly," I replied; I see that you are quite as fond of the horse as he is of the sweets."

"Yes, I think everything of him."

"Then why do you torture him?"

"Torture my Prince?"

"Yes, that is just what you are doing. Do you not know that the poor animal suffers agony because his head is checked so unnaturally high? His neck is drawn out straight, producing a most ungraceful angle, he holds his head awkwardly, the bit is hurting his mouth, and that graceful curvature of neck and carriage of head which are his in nature are now entirely lost. Why do you check him so high?"

She didn't know. She was not aware that high checking was a source of pain to horses, nor that it destroyed their natural beauty. She was amazed at the discovery.

"May I trouble you to loosen his check?" she asked.

When the strap was unsnapped the horse immediately lowered his head, straightened the cramp out of his handsome neck, shook himself to make sure that he had actually been released from bondage, and then looked round with such a grateful, delighted expression in his intelligent eyes that his mistress declared no more checking straps should be used upon him.—Chicago Herald.

HOUSEKEEPERS' PERILS.

I wish I could proclaim, says a writer in the New York Evangelist, to every one who does not already know it, a thing that perhaps most every one besides myself always knew, namely: That hot grease or oil will melt lead, will unsolder any soldered dish or vessel. I have lately learned this to my great danger and the danger of my home. Young housekeepers, beware! I being a "young housekeeper," find that the rule is "live and learn," and as not to know the latest thing I have learned may be death and destruction to the unknowing, I hereby warn all not to heat fat or oil in any tin or any soldered dish. I did it and had a flood of grease and fire. I escaped with only a terrible smoke, a slight burn and a great job of cleaning up. One thing more, and never forget it. Soapstone will explode! It will; it did. I took my soapstone out of its dry wraps and laid it atop of my stove. I sat close to the stove buttoning my shoes, when bang! went that soapstone, and it left the top of the stove in 1000 atoms; in fact, it was blown to powder. The chimney was bricked up, and it all went that way against the bricks. Had it come my way I had not been trying to warn you. Soon as I could move, so astounded was I, I ran to call the family. "I thought it was a gun," said one of the men. "I heard it up stairs." All were surprised. Not one of us had ever heard that soapstone would explode; but there it lay. About one-third of it remained upon the stove. Now, dear readers, do be careful. Do not trust to far in soapstones, nor in hot fat.

AN EPISCOPAL diocesan convention in South Carolina spent last Friday in a wrangle over the question of admitting colored clergymen to the floor as delegates, and when it was decided in their favor some of the white clergymen and a majority of the lay delegates withdrew. We hardly see how these delicately-constructed Christians are going to get along in the future life, for nothing but an exclusively white Heaven will ever answer for them, evidently.

REPORT has it that an attempt will be made in the Legislature, toward the close of the session, to raise the pay of the members to $1000. One hundred dollars was added to the salary last year, making it $750, an attempt to make it $1000 failing, but another effort will be made this year, and if the proposed grab succeeds its projectors will be happy, the state treasury will be $70,000 thinner, and the Legislature will be disgraced in the eyes of the people, and "don't you forget it."

"THAT any member of the Legislature should esteem his dignity affronted by a respectful petition passes my comprehension," writes Senator Hoar to State Senator Morse, in a letter wherein he affirms his rights as a citizen to petition that body whenever he chooses, and also points out the duty of the Legislature toward the lobby. The letter is a notable one, and will repay reading. He says further:

> The Legislature is not a papal conclave or even a law court from which all that is thought in the external world is to be studiously shut out. On the contrary it is that part of the goverment where every man, the humblest and poorest, as well as the strongest and the wisest, has the right to send his desire or his suggestion, and have it weighed. I doubt if I should exaggerate if I were to say that this is one of the most important events in our legislative history. For the first time, the facts have been officially reported and recorded, that a large sum of money, 10 times what could be needed for any necessary or legitimate expenses for the purpose, has been raised by the promoters of a piece of special legislation to be used in securing its passage. It is not suggested that any member of the Legislature has been corrupted, or is even capable of corruption. You were therefore free to make a precedent for all future time, without appearing to impute wrong to any person in the public service. It is said that such things have happened before, and have been done on both sides of this case. They have never been disclosed to the public before. If this is becoming a practice, so much the more is it a grave danger, and demands the most serious consideration, and the most heroic remedy.

"Natural Law in the Business World," a book of 222 pages by Henry Wood, recently published by Lee & Shepard of Boston, discusses with marked vigor, plainness and ability the vital questions involved in the labor problem. It shows that natural law permeates every department of the business world, and that all combinations, of whatever nature, not based on this law, are mischievous and destructive. It is a forcible and instructive book, deserving of a careful reading, and it ought to do much in clearing away many of the fallacies of the day. It is meeting with a deservedly large sale, and is sold at the bookstores, or will be sent by the publishers upon receipt of 75 cents.

What is the reason some Amherst man cannot have the plum, if it is a plum? What is the matter with Monroe Thayer, for many years employed at the New London Northern depot, a man of experience and capable. Go for it, Monroe!—Amherst Record.

Agent James Anderson of the long named society was in town Wednesday, looking after abused equines, and Thursday swore out a warrant against Henry Tracy of Three Rivers for "cruelly driving" a horse, claiming that the animal was suffering from partial paralysis of the spinal cord, and not in a fit condition to live. Expert horsemen were produced, however, who were unable to find any disease about the animal, and as Tracy had not over-driven or abused it, he was honorably discharged.

Mrs. Abbie Cutler King, widow of the late Col. Isaac King, died at the old homestead in the eastern part of the town last Sunday, at the age of 88, having lived in the house since her marriage, 70 years ago, and celebrating her golden wedding there in 1867. Mrs. King was born in Bakersfield, Vt., and when she came to Palmer a bride in 1817 there was but one house in this village, the old Parks house on South Main street. She has been subject to poor spells for a few years past, and was stricken with paralysis on the 3d inst., but was conscious up to the day of her death. She had a wide acquaintance, and was loved by all who knew her. Letter-writing was one of her recreations in late years, and she left five pages of an unfinished letter, written the day before she was stricken. Her sister, Mrs. Elmira Ferrell of this place, and a half brother, A. C. Billings of Waukesha, Wis., survive her, as do three of her five children,—Joseph, with whom she lived, Aaron, of Nashua, N. H., and Mrs. Brigham Pierce of Worcester. The funeral was held Wednesday at the house, which has sheltered four generations of the King family.

The campaign against illegal liquor selling is fairly under way. The enthusiasm which was aroused and so forcibly shown at the annual March meeting has lost none of its ardor. The town's committee meet with sympathy and hearty coöperation in the work, and so far have met with only one refusal to help search out the offenders. Of course in this, as in all reforms, there are some who throw cold water, and plenty who are free with suggestions and advice, but when invited to put their hand to the plow and carry out some of their wise plans, suddenly lose their zeal and "Don't care to be mixed up with it, for really it's none of my business, you know." But it is only with unity in purpose and action that a result of importance can be accomplished. Where there is union there is strength. One raid has been made upon Hannifin of Bondsville; a warning note had been given, and when the officers arrived the liquor had taken to itself legs and run from the premises. It is no time to lay back on your oars and see what "they" are going to do, but it is for every one of us to put in our best strokes and pull steady and long. You knew when you put "No" in the ballot box, and helped swell that large majority for "no license", that it was only the beginning of the battle, that it would be war to the knife. Let us march through the year with colors flying and as triumphant as on town meeting day. Adopt the words of U. S. Grant for our motto, "Unconditional Surrender."

An adjourned meeting of the veterans to complete arrangements for Memorial Day will be held at the house of J. C. Moody, Saturday evening.

The program for commencement week is as follows: Friday evening, June 17th, first and second year prize declamations; Sunday, baccalaureate sermon by Dr. Steele; Monday evening, junior prize declamations; Tuesday morning, meeting of the trustees—and the alumni address in the evening; Wednesday, class day exercises in the afternoon, and concert in the evening; Thursday, graduating exercises of the class of '87, in the morning, and commencement interview in the evening. Three classes will hold reunions.

BONDSVILLE.

William Lusty had two fingers and a thumb badly hurt by being caught in the rolls at the dye house, Tuesday.

Poor weather for gardens, and gardeners look rather disconsolate. The prospect of green peas for dinner the Fourth is not very promising.

Along with the carpet bugs, moths, red spiders and other vermin come sneak thieves. Tuesday night Mrs. John Watson had one pot of plants stolen, and the next morning found another that had been dropped in the street in front of the house. A night or two before another lady lost one of her best hens.

Shall we take it the supply of cider sold from one Main street establishment is diminishing, that the large innocent water pails have given place to equally demure tin ones? or that the paper covers so carefully tied on by the seller thereof are rather liable to blow off and show the nature of the fluid therein? Is it the wish of the citizens of this village that this nuisance be done away with?

LUDLOW.

The schools all close to-day so that the teachers may attend the convention.

The C. L. S. C. met last evening at the school house. Subject: "The life and work of Thomas Carlyle."

Charles F. Grosvenor is having a telephone put into his office to connect with his grist mill across the river.

A great many of the children are sick with the measles, and the schools are considerably broken in consequence.

Ransom Morse and family have moved to Spencer, where the best wishes of a large circle of friends will follow them.

The double tenement house that has stood facing the mill is being moved to make room for the Memorial Hall, which is to be erected some time in the near future.

The report that a site has been chosen for the new school house is contradicted. The committee chosen at the last meeting have looked at several places, but have not yet made a selection. But teachers and pupils seem quite contented in their present quarters, Joy's Hall.

The people of district No. 9 feel that they are quite fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Frank Parsons of Three Rivers as teachers of their school for the spring term. Mr. Parsons is a teacher of large experience, and is proving himself a very thorough and efficient teacher. It is hoped that he may be induced to remain for another term.

WARREN.

Mr. Drake will occupy the store vacated by Mr. Rockwood.

The board of health met Tuesday evening and organized for the year.

The small park fronting the town hall has an iron fence around it.

The Chautauqua club met with Mrs Emery Shumway Thursday evening.

The Warren band will play at West Brookfield Memorial Day, also at home.

Rev. Mr. Giles will give the Memorial sermon in the town hall, Sunday the 29th.

The lawn tennis grounds seem to be well patronized, as many are there every evening.

William Shepard has the contract for taking care of the town hall for the coming year.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union met with Mrs. Manly Thursday afternoon.

The regular meeting of the teachers will be held in the superintendent's room next Tuesday evening.

Mr. Green has the contrrct for putting in the foundation of William Jones's new house on East Main street.

The accommodation train which reaches here at half past 9 is much appreciated by people going to Boston, and by scholars attending school in Worcester.

East Main street is being much improved by the putting up of four new houses, also the taking away of the old tomb, which obstructed the view from the houses near.

There is a loud call for the village improvement society, as there are many places in the central part of the village which need to be looked after if we wish to make this place attractive.

The question of a new depot is again agitated, and it is to be hoped that efforts will be made to have it east of the park, as it seems to be the only proper place, the railroad officials having decided against the old location, it being such an obstruction to people crossing the road and railroad.

THREE RIVERS.

Mr. J. Barber of Fayville will preach at the Baptist church in this place next Sunday.

The bridge over the Quaboag is soon to be newly planked, which is very greatly needed.

The schools were not in session to-day and the teachers attended the convention at Springfield.

The drama "Louis Riel" will be presented by local talent at St. Ann's church, next Tuesday evening.

The May party given by the ladies' society of the Union Evangelical church, Wednesday evening, was a success both financially and socially. A large number was in attendance and every one had a good time.

John Downie has opened a news room at Mrs. Dunn's house in the room formerly occupied by Dr. Sirois. Here may be found all the leading newspapers, both daily and weekly, also magazines. He will soon add a cigar and confectionery department.

Since the appointment of B. P. Cunningham for postmaster, as successor of A. P. Trudeau, there has been a great deal of dissatisfaction both with the location of the office and its management. During the absence of the post master the office has often been left in charge of incompetent persons, and people desiring stamps and postal cards have often been unable to get them. The greatest cause for complaint seems to be that letters have remained in the office day after day with people calling for them repeatedly. The last mail is due here at 5.50 p. m., but quite frequently does not arrive until later. As the office has closed Tuesday and Thursday evenings at 6.30, the majority of the people have been unable to get their mail until the following morning or evening. Some two or three months ago a petition was circulated for the appointment of J. F. Foley as a successor of the present official. The petition met the unanimous approval of the people to whom it was shown. But as Mr. Foley's employers offered him inducements which made it an object for him to remain with them, he refused to be a candidate for the office, and the name of John F. Twiss, the popular livery man and also a member of the Democratic town committee, was substituted for that of J. F. Foley. Monday last the friends of Mr. Twiss were very much gratified to learn that he had been appointed to succeed Mr. Cunningham. The post office will probably soon be removed to its old quarters at the store of Trudeau & Rivers. When the office is once more established it is to be hoped that all will go so smoothly that murmuring will be heard no longer, and the post office will cease to be the theme for discussion.

WALES.

The Baptist pulpit will be supplied next Sunday.

Two years ago the citizens of our beautiful little town would have expressed some surprise if they had even supposed that we were to have the most elegant granite drinking fountain in New England, but through the generosity of W. B. Howard, Esq., of Chicago, we have it to-day, complete and in running order, the water being taken from J. M. Lyon's never-failing spring, and a brief description seems not out of place at this time. Mr. Howard, as is well known, traces his genealogy back through a long line of ancestry to an English lord, and with the characteristic generosity of his race, wished to remember the home of his boyhood in some substantial manner, and at his own expense contracted with Messrs. Flynt of Monson, for a $2500 fountain, which has been placed in the triangle near J. M. Lyon's. The fountain is all made up with granite from Flynt & Co's. quarry in Monson At the base are two bowls for dogs, sheep and small animals to drink from, while above are two bowls for horses and one for oxen. A nice capstone with nicely polished base is supported by four highly polished columns with beautifully carved capitals on each. Above the capstone is a capstone with frieze, on which is cut in polished letters the words "Presented by W. B. Howard to the town of Wales, 1887." On the top of this is a handsome polished ball, set in a nicely carved urn over which is placed an elegant lamp costing $100, with lettering on each side to guide the traveler on his way. A golden eagle on top of the lamp 20 feet from the ground completes the fountain. Inside the columns is an upright polished shaft with a bowl on top, surmounted by a glass ball decorated with lilies, from which the fountain receives its supply of water. On the north side is a faucet and two silver cups with the words "Howard Fountain" engraved on them for the thirsty traveler to drink from. Although Mr. Howard was so generous, there were other expenses to be met—the buying and placing of the pipes, and putting in the foundation. This expense was wholly met by another man whose boyhood home was in Wales—Mr. B. S. Farrington of Woonsocket, R. I.—the sum being about $200. It was suggested that if our citizens would show a little public spirit by drawing the fountain from Monson here that the Messrs. Flynt would do a handsome amount of extra carving on it, and the following parties responded: Ezekiel Dimmick, George Dimmick, C. M. Thompson, E. L. Needham, Willard Dimmick, Dea. Eugene Needham, Smith & Bradley with three yoke of oxen and one pair of horses, J. M. Lyon, Isaiah Hiscox, A. E. Freeman, W. G. Parker, Willie Royce. Take it as a whole it is something that our people and the traveling public generally will always highly appreciate, and the giver will ever be remembered for his kind remembrance of his native town.

MONSON.

A good promise for a crop of apple pumice.

Francis Fay is seriously ill, being troubled with heart disease.

The assessors are canvassing the town in the interest of the tax payers.

Mrs Oliver Hyde of New York city is visiting her sister, Mrs Chapman.

The signs of the times—those new guide boards in the hands of the painter.

It is estimated that over 25,000 railroad ties have been cut in town the past year.

Mark Noble has removed from his Main street block to his High street residence.

Alfred Wallace has been quite indisposed for some time and is having serious trouble.

Babbitt, the clothier, has a one prized granite clerk, although but a few days old.

Mrs. Lura N. Fitch and daughter left last week for their home in Livermore, Iowa.

Orcutt's Block is greatly improved by the coat of paint in colors it has lately received.

Fred W. King of Boston made a flying visit the first of the week to the old homestead.

Elliott H. Brown has his new barn completed, and appreciates the convenience and luxury.

William Lewis is building a granite dwelling house on the corner of State and Pearl streets.

Painters,—house, sign, carriage, ornamental and portrait,—are having a busy season.

Rev. Mr. Byington's farewell sermon has been published by request, and is now ready.

The post office address of Rev. E. H. Byington is Hotel Bellevue, 17 Beacon street, Boston.

The Young Men's club is meditating plans for future recreation, improvement and rest.

W. H. Underwood has purchased a promising two-years-old gelding of a party in Three Rivers.

Marcus Keep Post is making preliminary arrangements for the due observance of Memorial day.

Henry E. Newton of Amherst made a short stop at the paternal homestead last Tuesday afternoon.

Rev. H. S. Fisk of South Newmarket, N. H., supplies the pulpit of the Universalist church next Sabbath.

John Leahy was recently presented with a fine water pitcher by his associates in the W. N. Flynt & Sons' store.

The forest fire last week was a narrow escape for Squier's saw mill and the pine wood in the lot north of it.

E. D. Cushman starts next week on his annual wool purchasing tour through Michigan and other wool centers.

Richard Powers, of the firm of Powers Brothers, was in town Wednesday attending to business interests in this section.

Powers & Pendergast have leased the auction room in Newton's Block, their increasing business demanding more room.

Dr. J. P. Rand has been visiting his old home in New Hampshire this week, Dr. N. W. Rand being assisted by Dr. Watts.

Charles L. Jewett has purchased a fine team with which he can do his farm work, and also save shoe leather in coming to the village.

M. F. Bacon has just purchased a fine bay mare, and now is enabled to enjoy the luxuries of a pleasant ride "over the hills and far away."

George H. Thompson has the foundation in for a new barn which will be larger than the old one recently taken down, and much more convenient.

A new fence between the house lots of C. W. Holmes and Alfred Norcross is a great improvement on the unsightly hedge which had nearly died out.

The appearance of crows about these days suggest the inquiry "Where do all the crows come from?" A resident of Crow Hill says they have not lost any.

The Grand Army boys will attend the M. E. church in a body on the 29th, as it is their custom to attend some church service the Sabbath preceding Memorial Day.

The committee chosen to purchase chemical engines and apparatus for putting ont fires, hope to also purchase a hook and ladder outfit and not exceed the appropriation.

Asa K. Howe has a Chester sow that recently presented 15 pigs to the owner, all alive and prosperous. How is that for a family gathering—about Thanksgiving time?

Wesley Squier is the electrician of our town, being probably better read up and posted in the matter than others, and he is introducing electric alarms in the houses of many of our citizens.

The Monson Brass Band is practicing weekly, and shows proficiency, and it is to be hoped will be patronized to a sufficient extent to warrant a permanent and prosperous organization.

Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus W. Holmes, Jr., have returned from their recent trip to New York city, and Mr. H. is around looking after the many items he is wont to forward for the benefit of the community.

Alice Fuller reports visiting Pomona, California, and being entertained by Geo. L. Topliff and family, and speaks in terms of praise of the pleasant trip and winter sojourn in Los Angeles and vicinity.

Mrs. Mary A. Livermore delivered a splendid lecture last Monday evening at Academy Hall, and if she should again visit us would undoubtedly be greeted with a full house, as her recent appearance here won her a host of admirers.

The new interstate law has compelled a party moving here from Lowell to prepay freight before the B. & A. road would receive it. But then, if the freight and price of coal is reduced, our people are willing to put up with some other inconveniences.

There has been some excellent ball playing on Cushman's park on Saturday afternoons, and it would not be surprising if proficiency was made by some of the players that would insure an engagement another season in some of the league nines.

Horace Squier, sealer of weights and measures, has not received from the persons using weights, measures or balances the number of calls contemplated by the statutes. Parties in this town have lost the whole amount of their bill by non compliance with law in this respect.

The following gentlemen have subscribed the $400 necessary to insure the introduction of electric lights in the village: S. F. Cushman & Sons, $100; R. M. & T. Reynolds, $75; C. W. Holmes, $50; C. W. Holmes, Jr., $50; D. W. Ellis & Son, $50; Fay, Peck & Co., $25; W. N. Flynt & Sons, $25; E. F. Morris, $15; Dr. G. E. Fuller, $10.

It is probable that the Monson National Bank will build a new two-story brick building on the lot now occupied, the granite in the present structure working in for cellar and cap stones. The officers contemplate occupying the selectmens' room in Memorial Hall, which has a safety vault, and with the assistance of a watchman will feel quite secure in the temporary quarters.

Miss Louise S. Baker of Nantucket recently preached at the old South church in Worcester. A woman acting as a pastor of a church is not a very common sight in a Congregational pulpit. Miss Baker is exceptionally qualified for her chosen field of work, is well read, pleasant, yet impressive in both voice and manner, and at the same time there is much about her to suggest the emotional, and among the many who will occupy pulpits in Monson as candidates or as supply it is suggested that the committee invite Miss Baker. It surely would be a contrast, and might unite those otherwise disposed.

Whether the recent fires will be a warning to our citizens to prepare for a conflagration remains to be seen. Water works should be introduced in the village, and a fire district should be established, so as not to burden the farming community with taxation, and it will cost no more if as much to go at it this season as to wait and take the chances for the future. We are constantly told that "Delays are dangerous," "Put not off till to-morrow what can be done to-day," "Now is the time." Parties are ready and willing with the money to invest. Why won't some one canvass the village and see how many will take water and get an idea of the prospective outside remuneration, as also the probable amount a fire district should pay, and thus not only afford protection but also save quite an item in insurance rates.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Dr. Primeau, a French physician, has located in town.

J. H. Storrs is opening a new street from North to Vigeant street.

Miss Kate Curley, the telegraph operator, is taking a weeks' vacation.

Rev. G. V. Maxham will supply the Unitarian pulpit next Sunday.

Samuel Morse is to build a large tenement house near the depot.

Elwen C. Fenn lost a horse valued at $175 on Tuesday night from colic.

P. H. Sagendorph has sold a building lot to Isaac Jeffries for about $600.

The high school class of '88 is to trim the Soldier's Monument for Memorial Day.

Rev. James Boyle has raised about $5000 toward the building fund for the new Catholic church.

E. A. Aldrich has purchased a lot of J. A. Cummings on South street, where he is to erect a dwelling.

The hearing of the Otis company's tax case was closed last week, but judgment was reserved until some further day.

Only 206 dogs have been registered by town clerk Richardson. About 50 more will have to come to time or blood will be spilled.

The Ware Cadet band will hold their annual concert and ball at the town hall next Thursday evening, with music by Brigham's orchestra of Marlboro.

The road commissioners are to meet to-morrow to locate Knox avenue back on the land of Charles H. Stevens some 30 feet to make room for the Central Mass. railroad.

The Otis Company has given H. P. Cummings the contract to build three tenement blocks on Otis avenue. The buildings will be 100 feet long, three stories on the front and five on the back, and contain ten tenements each.

George Goby, from New York, is the new clerk in C. E. Blood's drug store in place of Arthur Woodard, who has gone to a store in Worcester, taking with him the best wishes of a host of friends he has made here.

The post office is surely going to Storrs' new block, the store where it is now having been rented to C. H. Ormsby, who will open a store for the sale of teas, coffees, spices and fancy groceries, as soon as he can get possession and fit up the room.

The Central Massachusetts railroad has bought the property of Mrs. Katherine G. Sandford for $2950, where it is expected the new depot will be located. Miss Lucy Harrington, who owns the other part of the house, has not disposed of her share yet.

Mrs. H. H. Eldred of Enosburg, Vt., the lady of whom an item was made some weeks since as having the operation of ovariotomy performed upon her at the residence of Dr. O. W. Roberts, has entirely recovered and returned to her home last week.

An electric light company has been formed with H. C. Davis, president, H. M. Clark, secretary and treasurer. The location of the engine and buildings connected with it will probably be near the depot. Quite a number of our business men have agreed to use the light.

Rev. Hugh Montgomery addressed a large audience on temperance at the town hall last Sunday evening. When he has facts that he can prove he does not hesitate to speak them in plain English. The better class of citizens are much pleased with the improvement since the first of May. Not an arrest for drunkeness.

The dramatic entertainment last week by the Star Dramatic Club of this town was well attended, and deservedly so, for most of the parts were remarkably well taken, and the play "The Flowers of the Forest; or, The Gypsy Queen," is a good one. The company cleared nearly $50, and expect to go to several neighboring towns with the same entertainment.

Dr. W. L. Roberts, who has been practicing dentistry in Spencer the past five years, has given up his business there on account of his health, and has removed to Ware. He is connected with the "American Spavin Cure Co," and will travel in the interests of the company, which is to establish a laboratory here for the manufacture of this popular remedy.

It is rumored that there is a disposition to boycott the boots and shoes sold in this town supposed to be manufactured by Batcheller & Lincoln of Boston, thinking they are in some way connected with E. & A. H. Batcheller of North Brookfield. The Batcheller of Batcheller & Lincoln was never any connection of the North Brookfield family, and furthermore, he has been dead for ten years, and the firm are not manufacturers at all, only jobbers, the firm consisting of J. B. Lincoln alone.

An important sale of real estate belonging to the estate of the late Ansel Ross took place on Tuesday amounting to over $9000. The Morse place was sold to the Central Mass. railroad for $950 above the mortgage, which was about $1600; the Putnam house sold to Thomas Higgins for $1260; the North street house to Levi Potvin for $2575; Snow place, West Main street, to Ellen McNaney, $1540; Sheldon lot, West Main street, to John Hennessey, $650. A lot near the pumping station was bought for the town for $95.

Memorial day will be observed by J. W. Lawton Post No. 85, G. A. R., on Monday, May 30. In the morning at 6.30 a detachment will go to Ware Center, at 9 o'clock a procession of the post and other organizations will form on Main street and march through the principal streets to the several cemeteries in the village. The address will be given in the evening at the town hall by Prof. E. H. Lord of Lawrence, and a male quartette will render selections appropriate to the occasion. Music will be furnished for the day by the Cadet Band. Contributions of flowers are solicited.

Last evening was the first presentation under the auspices of the G. A. R. of the beautiful war drama, "Newbern, or the Old Fag," and it was a grand success. The hall should be crowded to-night and to-morrow night, when it will be repeated. Edwin S. Lewis, the author of the drama, has personally superintended the presentation, and taken the part of Lieut. Charles Sandford in a masterly manner, Arabelle Lewis taking the part of Alice Bailey, the little rebel, in a spiteful, sprightly way well fitting the character, and when we mention such local names in the cast as W. F. Wilson, Hugh Cregan, Frank G. Fox, J. J. Connor, O. O. Cross, Geo. M. C. Barnard, Jerry Linson, J. Lashua, Miss Sarah Fay and Miss Alice Albin, we do not need to say the parts were well taken, and the acting excellent. The play is replete with beautiful tableaux, the last of which, "Victor Angels Welcome Home the Patriot Martyr," was the finest ever seen in Ware.

By the death of an Illinois relative, residents of Pelham will receive about $140,000.

About 75,000 acres of forest in the vicinity of Plymouth have been burned from an Old Colony locomotive spark.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, May 11th, 1887.

From our Special Correspondent.

Thursday was another whole day devoted by the House to the debate on the Beverly case, for the bill to incorporate the town of Beverly Farms came up on the question of being enacted. Mr. Kent of Worcester moved to refer it to the next Legislature. Later, Mr. Perkins of Cambridge moved to strike out the enacting clause. At the close of the day the vote on referring it to the next Legislature was 63 yeas to 123 nays. The vote on striking out the enacting clause was 75 yeas to 104 nays. The latter vote showed substantially the division of the House on the merits of the bill, while the first vote showed more particularly the opinion of the House on the outside pressure, especially for political reasons, to compel them to refer the bill to the next Legislature so as not to endanger Gov. Ames's reëlection or the success of the Republican party next fall. There was lively kicking against the "whip" of the "ringmaster," as Mr. Taft of Palmer put it, and Senator Hoar and Adin Thayer were reflected upon pretty warmly for presuming to advise the House what to do.

The Senate has passed without debate the bill to check the power of the lobby by providing for so-called "parliamentary agents," who shall be registered.

The labor committee reported on Friday a bill to change the weekly payments law so that towns and counties need not pay weekly unless the employes ask for the money. Power to institute complaints for violation of the law is given to the chief of the district police, and to the inspectors of factories. A unanimous report has come from the same committee in the shape of a bill requiring the state to loan money to poor people for the purpose of building themselves houses, but not over $200,000 in one year.

The education committee has reported a resolve appropriating $100,000 to the Institute of Technology, if it can secure another $100,000 from its funds, and will give the state 20 free scholarships.

The House took all day Friday for the disposal of the water gas bill. The rising vote was 58 to 49 in its favor, but a roll call changed it to 49 yeas and 48 nays. But that is nearer success than the water gas people have come before. Testimony from Athol and Cottage City, where it is in use, was that the light was better and much cheaper than coal gas and equally safe. By 63 to 71 the House on Monday again voted against the bill on reconsideration.

Such children as "persistently violate the reasonable rules and regulations of the common schools" are hereafter to be treated as truants, if the Legislature passes a bill reported on Monday by the education committee.

In reply to Gov. Ames's message regarding danger from liquor saloons in riots, the judiciary committee has reported a bill giving to the local authorities of any place the right to close saloons in times of public excitement, and the saloon-keepers are liable to $200 fine and loss of their license, if they disobey.

The labor committee has reported a bill to prevent unjust fines for imperfect weaving. The fine is in no case to exceed the damage. The fault is to be called to the attention of the operative as soon as the cloth is examined, and the rules are to be posted in the weaving-room.

A bill from the education committee proposes to cure the evil from illiterate minors by punishing by a fine of from $25 to $50 all employers, parents or guardians who employ or permit to be employed, except in vacation time, any minor under 14 years who cannot write or read the English language, or by fine of from $50 to $100 in case of such minors over 14 years of age in places where there are evening schools.

By 75 to 98 the House on Monday refused to adopt the resolutions of Mr. Walker of Worcester, protesting against the exclusion of members of the House from inside the rail of the Senate.

On Tuesday the Senate enacted the Beverly Farms bill, and it was sent to the governor. No debate occurred, though each side was prepared for it, because it would probably not have affected the vote at all. Gov. Ames has expressed himself recently in favor of the bill, and it is expected that he will sign it. The vote of the Senate was as follows:

YEAS: Alger, Clark, Fernald, Fletcher, Gould, Jelts, Jenkins, Jones of Berkshire, Jordon, Keith of the Cape, Keith of Plymouth, Kimball, Marble, Milliken, Morse, Perkins, Phillips, Pillsbury, Reed, Sleeper, Towne—21.

NAYS: Cook, Currier, Forbes, Gleason of Worcester, Gleason of Plymouth, Glines, Hartwell, Howard, Jones of Essex, Newhall, O'Sullivan, Roods, Slattery, Welch, Wilbur—15.

Sayles, yes, was paired with Dwyer, no. The only vote changed in the whole commotion over the bill was Senator Hartwell's.

The Senate has yet to act on the high license bill, but instead of leaving the fee for a first class license from $500 to $1000 as it came from the House, it has made it $350 and made the minimum in each other class $100, except druggists, where it is $50.

The House bill in regard to publishing the last known addresses of unknown savings bank depositors has been amended by the Senate so as not to apply to sums of less than $25, and engrossed.

The education committee reports that the matter of a half-mill tax for a school fund should be referred to the next Legislature. A minority report inexpedient to legislate.

The judiciary committee reported in the Senate on Wednesday a bill allowing justices of the superior court to retire on half pay at the age of 70, provided they have been ten years in consecutive service.

A bill from the liquor law committee requires self-registering ballot boxes to be used in voting by cities and towns upon the question of issuing liquor licenses.

The House has postponed to Tuesday the bill to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors by druggists and apothecaries. An amendment is pending making it mandatory on local authorities to issue such licenses.

A bill reported from the liquor committee on Wednesday provides that no person who is engaged in the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors, either as principal or as agent, shall be allowed to sit on a jury for the trial of liquor cases. The committee also reported that it was inexpedient to make the limit of alcohol in intoxicating liquor either four or one per cent. The House has engrossed the liquor bill allowing abuttors, objections to licenses to include any property within 25 feet.

The House has adopted an order for a special committee to examine and report to the next Legislature upon the matter of illiterate minors, and the illiterate minor bill has been tabled to see what the Senate does with the order.

Forbes & Wallace, Springfield, are offering Swiss Chambray robes at $1.78 and upwards. White robes, all over embroidery for skirts, $7 and $7.50. Cream Balerto robes with plain and colored embroidery $3, worth $5. Nainsook suits and colored embroidery $5 to $10.

The generosity of the Broadhurst Bros. (Morse's Shoe Store), 376 Main St., Springfield, Mass., is fully appreciated by their host of patrons who like to have shoes that are stylish, fine, seasonable, and still not costing a fortune. Their Women's Kid Button for $1.25 are good ones; and $3 buys a pair of Men's or Women's warranted button boots which would sell for twice that sum in this vicinity.

FACTS WORTH KNOWING.

In all diseases of the nasal mucous membrane the remedy used must be non-irritating. The medical profession has been slow to learn this. Nothing satisfactory can be accomplished with douches, snuffs, powders, syringes, astringents or any similar application, because they are all irritating, do not thoroughly reach the affected surfaces and should be abandoned as worse than failures. A multitude of persons who had for years borne all the worry and pain that catarrh can inflict, testify to radical and permanent cures wrought by Ely's Cream Balm.

CHIPMAN'S PILLS purify the blood, increase the appetite, make you feel new. A positive cure for Sick Headache, Malaria and Dyspepsia. Try them. For sale by all druggists. 1y27

A Certainty.

Steele's Little Bile Pills are without an equal for stimulating the liver to healthy action, and creating a proper secretion of bile, thus removing from the system the germs of malaria, curing constipation, indigestion, and inducing a healthy circulation of the blood, without which no one can enjoy sound health. They are small, but effective; free from nauseating propensities and griping pains, and do not interfere in their action with the ordinary routine of daily life. Heavily sugar coated. To be had of LeGro & Lynde, for 25 cents per bottle. 1yseow

An End to Bone Scraping.

Edward Shepherd, of Harrisburg, Ill., says: "Having received so much benefit from Electric Bitters, I feel it my duty to let suffering humanity know it. Having a running sore on my leg for eight years; my doctors told me that I would have to have the bone scraped or leg amputated. I used, instead, three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and my leg is now sound and well."

Electric Bitters are sold at fifty cents a bottle, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve at 25c. per box by LeGro & Lynde, Palmer, and C. E. Blood, Ware. 5

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the perscription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25c. a bottle. 1y21

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child she cried for Castoria,
When she was a Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

ASTONISHING SUCCESS.

It is the duty of every person who has used Boschee's German Syrup to let its wonderful qualities be known to their friends in curing consumption, severe coughs, croup, asthma, pneumonia, and in fact all throat and lung diseases. No person can use it without immediate relief. Three doses will relieve any case, and we consider it the duty of all druggists to recommend it to the poor, dying consumptive, at least to try one bottle, as 80,000 dozen bottles were sold last year, and no one case where it failed was reported. Such a medicine as the German Syrup cannot be too widely known. Ask you druggist about it. Sample bottles to try, sold at 10 cents. Regular size, 75 cents. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in the United States and Canada. 47eow

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN, ss. PROBATE COURT.—To all persons interested in the estate of Mabel L. Graves and Edna Graves both of Palmer, in said county, minors, Greeting:

Whereas, Justus Hitchcock, the guardian of said minors, has presented for allowance the fifth account of his said guardianship and requests that his four accounts heretofore presented and ordered filed and recorded may be taken from the files and allowed.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Springfield, in said county, on the first Wednesday of June next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why the same should not be allowed. And said guardian is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper printed at Palmer, three weeks successively, the last publication to be two days, at least, before said Court, and to mail a copy hereof to each of you who may live out of this county, fourteen days at least before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this eleventh day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven.

Bartimeus.

I would receive my sight; my clouded eyes
Miss the glad radiance of the morning sun,
The changing tints that glorify the skies
With roseate splendors when the day is done:
The shadows soft and gray, the pearly light
Of summer twilight deep'ning into night.

I cannot see to keep the narrow way,
And so I blindly wander here and there,
Groping amidst the tombs, or helpless stray
Through pathless, tangled deserts, bleak and bare;
Weeping, I seek the way I cannot find—
Open my eyes, dear Lord, for I am blind.

And oft I laugh with some light, thoughtless jest,
Nor see how anguish lines some face most dear,
And write my mirth, a mocking palimpsest—
On blotted scrolls of human pain and fear;
And never see the heartache underlined—
Pity, oh son of David! I am blind.

My useless eyes are reservoirs of tears,
Doomed for their blind mistakes to overflow;
To weep for thoughtless ways of wandering years,
Because I could not see—I did not know.
These sightless eyes—than angriest glance less kind—
Light of the World, have pity! I am blind.

Robert J. Burdette.

A Bed-Time Song.

Sway to and fro in the twilight gray,
This is the ferry for Shadowtown;
It always sails at the end of the day,
Just as the darkness is closing down.

Rest, little head, on my shoulder, so;
A sleepy kiss is the only fare;
Drifting away from the world we go,
Baby and I in the rocking-chair.

See, where the fire-logs glow and spark,
Glitter the lights of the Shadowland!
The winter rain on the window—hark!
Are ripples lapping upon its strand.

There, where the mirror is glancing dim,
A lake lies shimmering, cool and still;
Blossoms are waving above its brim—
Those over there on the window-sill.

Rock slow, more slow, in the dusky light;
Silently lower the anchow down.
Dear little passenger say "Good- night,"
We've reached the harbor of Shadowtown.

—Lilian Dynevor Rice in May St. Nicholas.

LOW NECKED DRESSES.

Sweet candor compels me to say, writes Clara Belle, that Mrs. Stanton is so formed that I should think she could shine in decollette, while Miss Elizabeth Cleveland is—well, she's a school-marm, you know. But Miss Cleveland rather favored low-neck, while Mrs. Stanton opposed it. Of course, everyone remembers that Miss Cleveland said she "drew the line" at a certain point in the female physical ecocomy. Well, I didn't realize as much when I read that singular phrase as I do now. The truth is, I had never seen a lady who didn't draw the line, whereas since then I have seen a good many—I saw two ladies at the opera—who didn't draw any line at all. Of course, I don't mean that they didn't wear any dresses. That's the horridness of writing. You can't express a single sentence with any certainty of not being misunderstood., unless you write a whole book to explain it. So I will explain. These ladies were in the box of one of the officers of the opera company. They carried low neck to an extreme that I never dreamed of. You may think I am fibbing (though it is the honest truth), but the dresses of these two society princesses reached only to a level with their arm pits, and from that point up they were just as they were born. I once called these boxes in the New Opera House "bath tubs," and the name sticks to them, and you would know why if you saw them. They do remind you of bath tubs indeed, when you see the upper parts of ladies appearing above their sides and see no clothing covering their persons. Of course my readers want to know how any ladies could dress in that way—how they could make their dresses stay on. I can explain. The waists of these dresses reached only to the tops of their half-corsets, and were fastened there. The corsets were made without any bust part, and the dresses were fitted snugly upon them, and turned over the tops of the corsets and sewed there. This left the bust and arms perfectly bare, and, if that had been left so, the effect would have been shocking. To beautify the effect, the corsage rose to a point exactly in the center, and a film of lace was sewed to this dividing point and around each crescent-shaped cut of the corsage in front. To take the place of shoulder straps, each lady wears a kerchief of lace hung on each shoulder and falling to her waist. It was pinned to the dress, front and back, to hold it in place, but it was so thin you could see through it. These two ladies were young and very beautiful, and (perhaps) that is why the gentlemen all neglected Meyerbeer's grand work of "The Prophet" and focused their glasses on this box. They had plenty else of the same sort to interest them, however, for there were two or three score boxes full of ladies in more or less fashionable undress, though of course, all except these fair bathers drew the line where Miss Cleveland draws hers—at the middle of the bust.

For a little lady of two-and-a-half years old this will do: She had picked up a cane in the corner of the room and was playing with it—a plain stick bent at the end. Papa asked:

"What are you doing with the cane?"

"It isn't a cane."

"What is it then?"

"Why, it's an umbrella without any clothes on."

He was a clerk in a shoe store, but rather new to the business. When a pretty girl tripped in, asked for shoes, "What size?" he stammered. "Oh! size 3, and D—wide," she responded carelessly. He fainted before a brother clerk could explain that the width of shoes was regulated alphabetically and no profanity was intended.—Detroit Free Press.

"Why, Nellie," cried her mamma, "I don't know what I am going to do with you; this is the third time you have disobeyed me within an hour!" "Well, mamma," replied the little five-year-old, "I'm so small you mustn't 'spect too much of me!" —Detroit Free Press.

"Tell me not in mournful numbers,
Life is but an empty dream."

And yet it is, when all the marrow is taken out of it by some dread disease like consumption, that, neglected, means certain death; catarrh and bronchitis both distressing, and often leading to consumption, or like liver complaints or scrofula, which too often make those afflicted feel that life is empty. But these can all be cured. The use of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery,' the great blood, lung and liver remedy, does away with "mournful numbers," brings back lost health, and fills life full of dreams of happiness and prosperity. Druggists sell it.

A Good Appetite

Is essential to good health; and at this season it is often lost, owing to the poverty or impurity of the blood, and the weakening effect of the changing season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful medicine for creating an appetite, toning the digestion, and giving strength to the whole system.

"When I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I was dizzy in the morning, had a headache, and no appetite; but now I can hardly get enough cooked to eat." EMMA SHEPARD, 1 Coral street, Worcester, Mass.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for dyspepsia, which I have had for the last nine or ten years, suffering terribly. It has now entirely cured me." Mrs. A. NORTON, Chicopee, Mass.

"I must say Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I ever used. Last spring I had no appetite, and the least work I did fatigued me ever so much. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon fel as if I could do as much in a day as I had formerly done in a week. My appetite is voracious." MRS. M. V. BAYARD, Atlantic City, N. J.

The Orphan's Plea.

From the Springfield Republican.

Suggested by an incident in Springfield Cemetery on Decoration Day, 1868.

With sable-draped banners and slow measured tread,
The flower-laden ranks pass the gates of the dead,
And, seeking each mound where a comrade's form rests,
Leave tear-bedewed garlands to bloom on his breast.
Ended at last is the labor of love—
Once more through the gateway the saddened lines move—
A wailing of anguish, a sobbing of grief,
Falls low on the ear of the battle-scarred chief;
Close crouched by the portals, a sunny-haired child
Besought him in accents with grief rendered wild:

"Oh, sir! he was good, and they said he died brave—
Why, why did you pass by my dear papa's grave?
I know he was poor, but as kind and as true
As ever marched into the battle with you—
His grave is so humble no stone marks the spot,
You may not have seen it, Oh, say you did not!
For my poor heart would break if you knew he was there,
And thought him too lowly your offerings to share.
He didn't die lowly,—he poured his heart's blood
In rich crimson streams, from the top-crowning sod
Of the breastworks which stood in the front of the fight—
And died shouting onward! for God and the right!
O'er all his dead comrades your bright garlands wave,
But you haven't put one on my papa's grave.
If mamma was here—but she lies by his side,
Her wearied heart broke when our dear papa died."

"Battalion! file left! countermarch!" cried the chief,
"This young orphan'ed maid hath full cause for her grief—"
Then up in his arms from the hot, dusty street,
He lifted the maiden, while in through the gate
The long line repasses, and many an eye
Pays fresh tribute of tears to the lone orphan's sigh.

"This way it is—here, sir, right under this tree;
They lie close together, with just room for me."

"Halt! Cover with roses each lowly green mound—
A love pure as this makes these graves hallowed ground."

"Oh! thank you, kind sir! I ne'er can repay
The kindness you've shown little Daisy to-day;
But I'll pray for you here, each day while I live,
'Tis all that a poor soldier's orphan can give.
I shall see papa soon, and dear mamma, too—
I dreamed so last night, and I know 'twill come true;
And they will both bless you, I know, when I say
How you folded your arms round their dear one to-day—
How you cheered her sad heart and soothed it to rest,
And hushed its wild throbs on your strong, noble breast;
And when the kind angels shall call you to come,
We'll welcome you there to our beautiful home,
Where death never comes, his black banners to wave;
And the beautiful flowers ne'er weep o'er a grave."

THE BURIED TREASURE.

"John," said Mrs. Lester, as she and her husband sat on their little front porch in the cool of the summer evening, "when do you mean to cut down that old tree, and to dig up that great black stone out of the way? I've got to hate the sight of them, and I am sure they spoil the looks of the whole place."

John Lester glanced lazily over the trim front garden, which his wife had taken so much pains to make bright and attractive with grass plots and flower-beds."

"Oh, I'll do it before long, when I have time enough, and ain't feeling too tired with my day's work!"

"But you've been saying that for over two years," his wife replied, impatiently, "Why not make up your mind to do it at once, instead of putting it off month after month? You might begin this evening, she added, rather hesitatingly. "A little digging around the stone, now and then, would help to loosen it, and so there would be less trouble in getting it out of the way at last."

"I don't see why you should be worrying over that old tree and that black stone, as you've been doing ever since we've been living here," Lester replied lazily. "They mayn't be very handsome to look at"—glancing critically at the objects in question—"but I don't see what harm they're doing."

"You forget that Nellie fell on the rock yesterday, and bruised her face and arms, and it is in the way of my flower-beds. I had to carry that walk out of the right line to get around it; and as for that dead tree, it reminds one of a skeleton, to say nothing of the litter it makes, now that it is beginning to shed its bark."

"Oh, well, I'll attend to it some time, provided you don't worry me to death about it meanwhile. I'm only waiting for a good opportunity, when I shall have a whole evening for the job."

And Lester lighted his pipe and strolled out to the front gate to enjoy a chat with a passing neighbor.

When another three years had passed the skeleton-like pear tree had disappeared, having been converted into fuel; but the ugly stone still disfigured the Lester premises.

The habit of laziness and procrastination which had prevented John Lester from setting to work to remove them, had shown itself in more important things, and his business, which had promised fairly in the beginning, had now begun to slacken.

He was a first-class workman; but when people ordered work to be done they did not like to be compelled to wait for it, often without a good excuse being offered for the delay.

And so his business gradually went down and money became scarce, while family wants increased.

At length in preference to a mortgage he was reduced to exchanging his pleasant home, with its large lot and garden, for that of his next-door neighbor, not half so large or valuable.

This neighbor, James Duncan, had come to the village about the same time as Lester, though a much poorer man.

He was a hard worker, and had gradually worked himself up, as John Lester seemed going down. The plain little cottage of two rooms he had added to and beautified with a shady porch and green window blinds; and the perfect order and neatness which reigned about the premises afforded a contrast to those of his next-door neighbor, where now the gate might be seen hanging on a loosened hinge, or a picket or two be missing from the fence, for days and even weeks together.

Once, when Mrs. Lester had inquired of her husband, for the fifth time, why he did not mend the gate, John had essayed to turn it off with a joking rejoinder.

"What would be the use, when Nellie and Wat Duncan would soon have it out of order again, swinging and hanging upon it."

"Nellie never swings on the gate. She's too old for that now," replied her mother. "And as for Wat, he's too sensible to hang over and break down the gates. He takes after his father in being careful about everything."

Lester fancied there was an indirect reproach in the words, and he replied crossly:

"Well, I wish he'd be careful enough to keep away from my gates altogether, especially when Nellie's about. There's hardly an evening that I don't see them chatting out there together; and I tell you Bessie, it's beginning to look like something more than child's play. Why don't you keep Nellie out of his way?"

"Why should I do so. They've known each other ever since we've lived here, and I never before heard any objection raised against Walter Duncan."

"But he and Nellie are no longer children, and I don't care that the intimacy be kept up. Somehow it never struck me before," he added thoughtfully, "but now that I come to think it over, it does seem to me that Wat is paying too much attention to Nellie. Didn't he go with her to church last Sunday evening?"

Mrs. Lester paused a moment or two before replying. Then she seated herself near her husband and said, gravely, in a voice that faltered a little:

"I have thought of this before, John, if you haven't, and if there's any truth in it,—if the two should fancy each other—I don't see why we should take it upon ourselves to oppose it. Walter Duncan is as industrious a youth as there is in the village, and I've never known one of a better disposition.

John Lester took his pipe from his lips and looked steadily at his wife for an instant. He was rather surprised at finding his vague suspicion thus unexpectedly confirmed.

"So you've seen it along," he said sharply, "and no doubt been encouraging it? You may talk about good habits and disposition, but did it never occur to you to inquire what Wat Duncan has got to live upon, if he should be fool enough to think of taking a wife?"

"He would hardly think of marrying yet. He is young enough to wait: and as for the rest, he'll have a good trade, in which there's no reason to think that he won't succeed, considering how careful and industrious—"

"I don't want to hear anything more about it!" Lester exclaimed, suddenly rising and knocking the ashes out of his pipe. I won't have him fooling around Nellie, talking about waiting and maybe keeping her from making a better match. Until Wat Duncan can show me—say as much as five-hundred dollars to begin with—he need not think of my daughter for a wife."

And he walked away giving the unhinged gate a vicious jerk as he passed through; while Nellie, who, in the next room had heard every word, laid her pretty head on her arms and quietly cried.

And it was less than a month after this that John Lester, to rid himself of debt, found himself reduced to the necessity of selling his comfortable home.

No one was more surprised than himself when his next door neighbor, Duncan, presented himself as purchaser.

He had been working, and saving, and laying up money so quietly and gradually that his acquaintances had not supposed him to be able to make such a purchase.

It all came, he assured them, of attending to little things as well as great, and doing promptly whatever there was to be done.

He was still a poor man, with rather a large family, and he and his good wife would have to scrape and save years longer, before the whole of the purchase money could be paid.

And as for John Lester, he found that the most convenient arrangement he could make was to take his neighbor's vacated cottage; so that the two families still remained next door neighbors.

What Lester had said to his wife in regard to Wat and Nellie he afterwards said to the young man himself, when the latter one day, shy, but earnest, ventured to speak to him upon the subject nearest his heart.

And that evening, in an interview between the two young people, they both agreed to wait and be true to each other, as Nellie said, if it would take ten, twenty, thirty years to obtain that five hundred dollars.

They both knew her father too well not to be sure that, having once declared his resolution, he would stick to it out of sheer obstinacy. They would wait; but oh, how long and weary would the waiting be to them!

It was hardly a week after the change of abodes had been effected. The Duncans had already put the place in nice order, while with the Lesters "things weren't fixed and wouldn't be for a week to come," Mrs. Lester complainingly said.

She had this evening prevailed upon her husband to put up her store-room shelves, and he had then gone to sit on the porch in his shirt sleeves, to refresh himself with a pipe.

While thus employed he observed Wat Duncan busily at work in their front garden—the garden that had lately been his own.

He was digging around the big black stone, which, protruding a foot or so above the surface of the earth in which it was embedded, had always been an eye-sore and a stumbling block among the flower beds.

"Hump!" muttered Lester. "So they've got to work pretty early on that old rock, and now, I suppose, I shan't hear the last of it from Bessie. Wonder how many weeks it'll take to get through with the job, considering he's only got a few minutes for each day between work hours and supper."

It was less than a week after this that John Lester, coming home one evening later than usual, was met at his gate by his neighbor, James Duncan, with a wonderful piece of news.

He had that evening assisted Wat to pry up the big stone in the garden, and upon removing it had found an iron kitchen pot, half full of money, and two sets of old-fashioned silver table and tea spoons. And he wanted to know if Lester knew anything about this buried treasure or could give any information which might serve as a clew to its owner.

It took a good deal of inquiry before a clew could be obtained.

There were two or three elderly people who remembered when a certain Hugh Miller, a man of good circumstances, had come to the village, which at this time consisted of but few houses, and built himself a good house on the very spot where the black rock had so long remained.

In fact, one of them recalled that the stone had been in a rough shed-room adjoining the house, used as a storing-place for rubbish and odds and ends.

Miller had subsequently spoke of moving "out West," and with this view taken a preliminary journey thither, where he had died, and there could be no doubt that when he went West, expecting to be absent for months, he had, perhaps to guard against possible robbery, placed this money in the ground, and covered it over with the stone for safe keeping, saying nothing about it to any one.

After his death, his two maiden sisters continued to occupy the house, until it was accidentally burnt down, when they removed to a small cottage in the village and lived quite comfortably until their deaths, some years after.

What property they possessed, including the lot upon which their brother's house had stood, they bequeathed to a distant relative; and this relative being communicated with, proved to be a wealthy tradesman of St. Louis, who having, as he said, already sold the lot, declined to advance any claim upon the money.

So far as he was concerned, as sole heir to the deceased Miller family, he willingly waived any claim he might have to the one thousand five hundred dollars in favor of the person on whose premises the money had been found. And so, clearly, the Duncans had come into possession of a fortune.

Wat shall have the odd five hundred," Duncan said to his next door neighbor, with a twinkle in his eyes. "He's entitled to it, since it was he who set to work on that stone." His motto is, "When a thing has got to be done let it be done at once. And if you'd acted on this principle, neighbor, this money would never have been ours."

Lester was too deeply chagrined to reply; yet could not refuse his consent when Wat came to him, happy and elate, to ask again for Nellie's hand, saying that he had the five hundred dollars to begin with.

And to this day Wat Duncan points out to his little boys the big stone used in his stable-yard as a horse-block, and tells the story of the buried treasure, pointed with the moral of his chosen motto—"When a thing is to be done, it must be done at once."

And when John Lester, occasionally alluding to the same subject, mourns over his ill-luck in having missed finding that money, he is generally cut short by his wife reminding him that "it was his own fault."

"PERFECTLY LOVELY."

In a recent Journal of Education Kate Sanborn mentions some of the more common expressions which mar the conversation of young people nowadays, and the following is especially held up to ridcule:

First and last let me anathematize "perfectly lovely." Bah! that is truly nauseating. I venture to affirm that that much-abused phrase is used at least ten times daily, by every school girl, every college girl, every young lady in this country. It is the stock phrase at Smith, Wellesley and Vassar; in fact, conversation would droop and languish without it. A young lady comes in to see me, and she begins, "Oh Miss Sanborn, how perfectly lovely your rooms are! and isn't it lovely to live in a flat! and you have an elevator—how lovely! It's just horid to climb three flights as I had to yesterday, although the bride I called on was so lovely I didn't mind, you know. Her rooms were fitted up so lovely with her wedding presents, don't you see, and she had on a perfectly elegant reception dress—just too lovely for anything, doncher know? I can't describe it, but it had lots of jet on satin, and 'twas just lovely. Her hair, you know, is just that exquisite lovely chestnut shade, with a ripple of gold, doncher know, and all that sort of thing. You don't know how I enjoyed your reception last week, the music was so splendid. And the pretty woman who whistled, wasn't she bewitching! just too lovely for anything! And the men! You do get such nice men—good looking, and such swells! Oh! ma and I said when we got home that it was perfectly lovely."

I have heard that phrase applied to a young pig, to a sausage, to an opera, to a corpse! I would like to start a society for its suppression and extinction. If a fine of one penny had to be paid every time it was used, we could raise the million-dollar monument to General Grant, send fifty thousand young women to Montana, put all the sewing women and superfluous women in easy circumstances, and send out another Arctic expedition.

Do not speak of your happiness to a man less fortunate than yourself.—Plutarch.

Don't stop to prink—
Prink! Prink!

The world's in a hurry—
A blessed pucker and flurry—
For life is short.
And the summer's begun,
And there's naught, naught, naught,
But loving and thanksgiving to be done,
Under the glad, glad, loving, loving sun!
That's what I say—
And think!
Bob-o-link! Bob-o-link! Bob-o-link!

"That's why I'm here!
Black-coated,
White cravatted,
Bob-o-link!
Don't you see?
Didn't you think!
Preaching Gospel every year—
Bob-o-link!

THE AFTER-DINNER NAP.

There is much difference of opinion concerning the desirability of an after-dinner nap. Those who advocate cite the example of animals, but these gorge themselves with food whenever opportunity offers, and are heavy and drowsy in consequence. A short rest is, however, different from lethargic sleep, and often appears to do good. Brain work should certainly be forbidden after dinner; the interval between it and bed-time should be devoted to recreation and amusement. In the case of elderly people a short nap after a late dinner often aids digestion, but as a general rule it is better for such persons to make their principal meal at 2 p. m. The digestive powers of most elderly people are at a low ebb in the evening. When sleeplessness is troublesome relief should be sought for in the discovery and removal of the cause whenever possible. The condition is often due to indigestion, and when this is the cause the ordinary remedies for inducing sleep are worse than useless. The nervous relations between the brain and the stomach are so intimate that disorder of the one organ is almost certain to affect the other. Excitement, worry, and anxiety, which have their seat in the brain, interfere with the functions of the stomach, and in like manner anything that unduly taxes the power of or irritates the stomach disorders the circulation and nutrition of the brain. The sleeplessness often complained of by gouty persons is due to the poisonous effect of the morbid material upon the nervous system. Excessive smoking, too much alcohol, tea and coffee, often resorted to by overworked persons, are frequent causes of sleeplessness. In all these cases the cause is removable, while the effect may be counteracted by appropriate treatment. Nothing is more mischievous, however, than to continue the habits, and to have recourse to drugs to combat the effects. A due amount of exercise tends to induce normal sleep, and such exercise need not be of a violent character. A walk of two or three miles daily is sufficient, and is, perhaps, as much as a busy man can find time for. A ride on horseback, the Palmerstonian cure for gout, is probably the best form of exercise for those whose minds are constantly at work. It has been well said that a man must come out of himself when in the saddle; he is forced to attend to his horse and to notice the objects he meets. Walking may be a merely automatic process, and afford little, if any, relief to the mind, and carriage exercise may be practically valueless, if the mind is not diverted from what had previously occupied it.—Fortnightly Review.

A TESTED REMEDY.

It is related that Bishop Kavanaugh, while out walking one day, met a prominent physician, who offered him a seat in his carriage. The physician was an infidel, and the conversation turned upon religion.

"I am surprised," said the doctor, "that such an intelligent man as you should believe such an old fable as that."

The bishop said: "Doctor, suppose, years ago, some one had recommended to you a prescription for pulmonary consumption, and you had procured the prescription, and had taken it according to order, and had been cured of that terrible disease; what would you say of the man who would not try your prescription?"

"I should say he was a fool."

"Twenty-five years ago," said Kavanaugh, "I tried the power of God's grace. It made a different man of me. All these years I have preached salvation, and, whenever it was accepted, I have never yet known it to fail."

What could a doctor say to such a testimony as that? And such testimonies are what men need to turn them from the error of their ways to the personal experience of the saving power of the Lord Jesus Christ.

"How would you prove the divinity of Christ?" said some ministers to a young backwoods preacher whom they were examining.

"What?" said he, puzzled by their question.

"How would you prove the divinity of Christ?"

"Why, He saved my soul," was the triumphant reply.

But to give this answer, one must be saved, and to know it in his heart, and show it in his life, and then he becomes a living epistle, known and read of all men.

"Oh, give us a rest," said a young man, impaitently, to a little boy who was busy plying him with questions. The little fellow looked at him a moment, and then, with the utmost innocence, said: "Well, you rest and I'll talk."—Columbia (S. C.) Record.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, MAY 27, 1887.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND started last night on a two-weeks' fishing trip in the Adirondacks, accompanied by Mrs. Cleveland and the Lamonts.

YELLOW FEVER has carried off three victims this week at Key West, Fla., and there is naturally much alarm at the appearance of the disease thus early in the season.

A ST. LOUIS voter convicted of fraudulent registration is refused a pardon by the president, who says, "I consider such offenses the worst of all crimes, and I know of none the punishment of which is more important to the public."

THE new Saturday half holiday started off very promisingly last Saturday in New York, and bids fair to become very popular. If New York state demonstrates the success of the movement, other states may conclude to try the experiment.

THE Boston Pilot is "clean gone" on U. S. District Attorney Stearns, and predicts that he will be governor of Massachusetts within two years and president of the United States before he dies. Well, we will be sure of a capital official when he is elected.

AFTER 23 years of litigation the driven well patent of Nelson W. Green is sustained by the supreme court of the United States, in a decision rendered Monday, and as there are over half a million of these wells in the country the patentee has only to collect a royalty of say $10 apiece to make a very handsome fortune out of it.

SEVERAL revenue districts throughout the country are to be consolidated, and Massachusetts will have but one district, the present 10th being consolidated with the 3d. Rhode Island is to be consolidated with Connecticut, and the Maine and Vermont districts will be merged in the New Hampshire district.

A CHANGE in the office of United States treasurer involves an immense amount of labor in the counting of all the cash in the treasury, now amounting to $232,000,000 in paper money, $60,000,000 in silver dollars, and $25,000,000 in gold coin, besides the fractional silver. The work was commenced on Monday, and will extend over several days.

THAT Lake Champlain sea serpent romance is ruthlessly destroyed by ex-Rev. W. H. H. Murray, who saw it, and was as much startled by its appearance as anybody, until he trained a powerful field glass upon it, when the monster was resolved into hundreds of plovers, flying in a long line, which made the resemblance to a serpent perfect to the unaided eye.

THE committee on liquor laws has at last reported a resolve providing for the submission to the people of a prohibitory constitional amendment. It now remains to be seen how many Republicans in the Legislature will carry out the party declaration by voting for the resolve. Even if a member is opposed to the principle he ought to be willing to submit the question to the people, and the action of members on this resolve will be scrutinized sharply.

THERE was a very narrow escape from a dreadful ocean disaster last week Thursday, when the steamer Celtic of the White Star line, ran into the Britannic, of the same line, 350 miles from Sandy Hook. There was a heavy fog at the time, and both vessels were running slowly, but the Celtic stove a big hole in the side of the Britannic, killing four steerage passengers, while her own bows were crushed in. The Britannic turned about and returned to New York with the Celtic. The damage to the steamships is estimated at $120,000.

GOV. AMES shows a finer sense of justice and a better appreciation of public sentiment in his veto of the Beverly division bill than the Legislature did in passing the measure after the investigation. The governor's message, which was sent to the House on Monday, is short and to the point. He does not discuss the merits of the bill, but bases his veto on the objectionable and demoralizing methods used in securing its passage. He quotes from the reports of the two investigating committees, in which "the growing demoralization in the methods pursued in promoting private bills and private interests before the General Court" is strongly condemned, and says: "'The strongest condemnation and the most effective remedy' I can apply is a veto." The governor has done wisely and bravely. Even if political expediency was an impelling motive with him, he had the courage to do an act which a mere politician would have shrank from, and the people will approve his course by a large majority.

Fourteen years ago a farmer of Rumford, Me., killed his son during a quarrel and buried him beneath the barn. A farm hand discovered his employer's secret, but kept it until the old man's burial the other day.

The business part of Lake Linden, Keweenah county, Mich., a village of 5000 inhabitants, was wiped out by fire last Friday, over 200 buildings being burned. The loss exceeded $1,000,000.

A strange result of the late earthquakes in Arizona and Northern Mexico was the restoring of copious supplies of water to river beds which had been dry as dust from time immemorial.

A pleasure boat was capsized at Philadelphia last Sunday and five persons drowned, and the same number were drowned in a similar manner near Harbor Spring, Mich.

The Opera Comique in Paris was burned during a performance Wednesday evening, and 150 persons perished in the flames.

Ex-Mayor Albert of Boston, a prominent worker in the Butler movement, died last Sunday.

A New Jersey man has been fined $25 for blasphemy. Col. Ingersoll defended him.

Michigan computes her losses by forest fires this spring at $3,000,000.

G. M. Atkins & Co. have the contract to build a cut stone overflow for the Thorndike company at Thorndike, in the canal near the dam. The cost is about $3500.

The Patterson Club met Wednesday evening at the house of J. A. Squier, on West Main street, the entertainment being furnished by members of the Crescent Club.

Mass at St. Thomas' church next Sunday will be celebrated at 9.30 a. m. instead of 11, the usual hour, and a class of children from the Sunday school will receive first communion.

Quite a number of the crack shots of Palmer go to Wellington next Monday to attend the shooting tournament held there the entire week, and expect to bring home a few of the prizes.

There are some splendid lawns for croquet in this village, and also some good players. How would a croquet club do? Possibly teams could be found in the other villages who would like to try conclusions.

O. E. Crawford, who has held the position of agent of the American Express company at Palmer since the location of the office at the depot, has resigned, and will take a place as messenger on the road once more.

The selectmen have appointed four more special police in the persons of four of the liquor prosecuting committee G. F. Wright, William Merriam, F. H. Proctor and F. A. Bowen—the other member of the committee not caring for the appointment.

Two Palmer young men who were patiently waiting for a rain before going trout fishing started at three o'clock Monday morning and drove off some ten or fifteen miles, only to find that no rain had fallen there, and they were obliged to return without a single fish.

The streets are noticeably free from "drunks" since the first of the month, and the change is greatly appreciated by all order-loving citizens. Now if some of the town's deputies or special policemen would only clear the sidewalks of the gangs of loafers in the evenings, Palmer would come pretty near being a model village.

A load of hay got "stuck" in attempting to come under the bridge over Commercial street yesterday afternoon, there not being sufficient space between the roadway and the bridge, and the forward wheels were pulled out from under the load. By the way, doesn't the law call for more than nine feet in the clear, in such places?

At St. Paul's church Sunday morning services will be appropriate for Memorial Day. The singing service will be as follows: Anthem, with solo for contralto, "God be Merciful;" soprano solo; response, "Thy will be done;" hymn, "America;" baritone solo; quartette, "Lead thou me on;" hymn of peace, for choir and congregation.

William Finnerty had a hearing at the district court Monday, charged with cruelly driving a horse. He was fined $17.03, but appealed. The case of William Thompson, for the illegal keeping of liquors, will be heard the first Monday in June. It seems that besides the bottle of wine found in the barn at the raid last week, a bottle of rum was also found behind the bar.

The 17th Masonic district will hold a lodge of instruction with Thomas Lodge of this place, next Friday afternoon at one o'clock. The work of the three degrees will be exemplified, and the lectures rehearsed under the direction of the grand lecturer, W. F. Andrews. Hymn.
Alto Solo, "Beyond the smiling and the weeping,"	Perkins

Amherst people are rejoicing that after June 1st the fare from that place to Boston, via Palmer, will be reduced from $2.50 to $1.45. The distance is 104 miles, making the rate about 1¼ cents per mile, or less than the mileage ticket rate. As the fare from Palmer to Boston is $1.90. or $1.68 if a mileage ticket is used, Palmer people can save quite a snug sum in the course of a year by sending to Amherst for their tickets when they wish to go to Boston.

The Grand Army Post has invited the Woman's Relief Corps to participate in the exercises of Memorial Day next Monday, and all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors are cordially invited to be present also. Sunday evening they will assemble at the post headquarters at 7 o'clock and march in a body to the Congregational church, where they will listen to a sermon by Rev. H. W. Pope. Monday morning at 8 o'clock they will take teams and visit the graves of veterans at Three Rivers, Four Corners and Thorndike, returning to this village, where dinner will be served in the rooms of the post. At two o'clock in the afternoon Col. S. C. Warriner of Springfield will deliver an address in the rink. Contributions of flowers are solicited, to be left at the post rooms Sunday afternoon. Music for the day will be furnished by the Palmer fife and drum corps.

ST. THOMAS' BAZAR.

The Catholics of St. Thomas parish find that their church is altogether too small, and have decided to enlarge it as soon as possible. With this end in view they propose to have a grand bazar, opening at Park street rink next Wednesday evening, and continuing through the week and the next Monday night. On the opening night a vocal and instrumental concert will be given by the choir, assisted by talent from the neighboring towns. The program for the following evenings will be varied, and all are assured of a good time. The members of the parish, the choir, and the A. O. H. will each furnish a table containing many attractive articles, and will also exhibit the articles to be voted for. There will also be a gold headed cane voted for, the contestants to be the superintendents of Holden's woolen mill, the carpet mill and the wire mill. The Palmer orchestra has been engaged to furnish music, and there will be dancing each evening. The price of admission will be 15 cents on Wednesday, and 10 cents for the other evenings. The merchants and the people generally have been very liberal with their contributions, as will be seen by the following list:

J. F. Holbrook, ton of coal; Chas. Holbrook, barrel of flour; H. P. Longley, barrel of flour; F. D. Barton, French clock; S. H. Hellyar, suit of clothes; C. K. Gamwell, Saratoga trunk; O. W. Studley, quarter of beef; Bell McKinnon, sofa pillow; Brooks Bros., clothes reel; Reed & Hearn, antique lace spread and pillow shams; Ed. Goodes, ladies' and gent's slippers; E. S. Brooks, silver watch; Mary Daunt, set silver spoons; Mrs. Deplisses, silver pickle castor; Mrs. Crowley, silver ladle; Ellen Scannell, silver castor; Maggie Kerigan, toilet case; Jacob Lacouline, hanging lamp; Oliver LaSalle, shaving set; D. Shugrue, box of cigars; W. A. Barnes, meerschaum pipe; C. A. Brown & Co., baby carriage; Mrs. Johnson, cut of cotton cloth; J. Simmons, gent's hat; Mamie Thompson, lemonade set; Mrs. Moran, table spread; J. Fenton, plaque; Mrs. J. L. Wilder, dozen napkins; Mrs. Joseph Thompson, lamp and glass set; Annie Murphy, large doll; Annie M. Grady, work basket; Lizzie Finnerty, napkin ring; Joseph Fitton, $25; F. J. Wassum, $5; Eugene Lynch, Boston, $5; Esther Collins, $5; Mrs. Michael Connors, $3; Mrs. John Daily, $3; Mrs. D. J. Mahoney, $1; Rev. T. J. Sullivan, $10 gold piece. The A. O. H. Society, harness, lemonade set, carving knife and fork, China cups and saucers, silver cake basket.

The alumni address at commencement will be delivered by Harvey N. Shepard, assistant attorney general of the state.

Next Sunday morning at the Congregational church Rev. G. M. Steele will deliver a memorial sermon. On Memorial Day a procession of veterans and citizens will march to the cemetery, where ex-Senator William R. Sessions will deliver an address, and a poem written by Prof. C. M. Raymond, "Our Flag at Half Mast," will be read, after which the graves will be decorated.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The ex-soldiers of this village will join with those of Wilbraham village in the observance of Memorial day.

Rev. M. S. Howard occupied his old pulpit in Grace church last Sunday, exchanging with Rev. M. S. Dudley.

The family of S. E. Baker made a short visit here this week, while on their way west. Mr. Baker is now in the employ of a Chicago grain firm, and will live at Oakland.

Jason Butler, for the past six years in the employ of the Cutler Co., has resigned his position with them, and taken up his old trade of carpenter. He is now in the employ of F. F. Marcy of Palmer.

The grist mill boys have long been anxious to play ball with the paper makers, and last Saturday their wish was gratified and they recorded a brilliant defeat, the score standing 28 to 13 in favor of the paper makers. And still the grist mill boys are talking of another game.

THREE RIVERS.

The French Catholics are to have a picnic next Monday, in the grove near Four Corners.

F. C. Croy of Boston will lecture in the Union church next Monday evening. Subject, temperance. All are cordially invited.

Jennie Churchill, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Chas. Nickerson, the past month, has returned to her home in North Raymond, Maine.

Capt. David Milliken and family, and his sons, J. J. and Rosco and their families, went Wednesday to Old Orchard Beach, Maine, where they will spend the summer.

Every one will be glad to know that the N. L. N. depot, which has so long been an eyesore on account of its dilapidated appearance, is now being thoroughly repaired.

Special attractions in "print" will be offered at the calico party, which will be given by Good Cheer Division, S. of T., next Friday evening. Ice cream and strawberries will be served.

John Downie is now the authorized agent in Three Rivers for the JOURNAL, and all orders left with will receive prompt attention, the papers being delivered on the arrival of the 5.37 train Friday afternoons.

The drama, "Louis Reil" was well rendered by local talent at St. Ann's church Tuesday evening. All the parts were well taken, Mr. Trudeau carrying out the part of "Reil" in a manner that would do credit to a professional. There was a large delegation from Indian Orchard present, and between four and five hundred tickets were sold.

THORNDIKE.

Miss Eva Johnson is back again.

The schools were closed last Friday.

A prominent Springfield sportsman is in town.

Beginning with next Sunday morning service at the Congregational church will begin at 10.45, with Sunday school at 12. The afternoon service will be discontinued for the present.

Frank R. Stebbins, a well known farmer and leading member of the Congregational church, died at his home last Friday of pneumonia. The funeral was held at the Congregational church Sunday, and was largely attended.

Services were commenced in the church at North Belchertown last Sunday, Mr. Parsons, of the Young Men's Christian Association at Middlebury. Ct., conducting them. Preaching services are at 2 p. m., Sunday school immediately following, and evening services at 7.30.

Memorial Day will be observed next Monday by E. J. Griggs Post 97, G. A. R., which will march at 10 a. m. to Mt. Hope cemetery, where these exercises will take place: Prayer by Rev. William Reed, music by Boston Duck cornet band, march to cenotaph in park, remarks by Rev. W. P. Lawford, music, prayer by Rev. P. W. Lyman, post and invited guests march to Grand Army hall for coffee. At 12 o'clock the post will go to Enfield, meeting comrades at the lower cemetery, proceeding from there to the church cemetery and cenotaph, then to the town hall, where the exercises will be: Memorial service by the post, music, prayer by Rev. Mr. Savage, reading of the death roll, poem by Rev. William Read, brief remarks by W. B. Kimball and others, music, memorial address by Rev. P. W. Lyman, "America," refreshments. All ex-soldiers, sailors and citizens are invited.

WARREN.

Mr. Warren has purchased a house of Oliver Moore.

The high school has a new piano, much to the delight of the pupils.

All the schools in the village are to have next Tuesday in which to visit schools.

The new hotel is nearly ready, and is expected to be well filled with summer visitors.

The teachers hold their monthly meeting in the superintendent's room next Wednesday evening.

The buildings at the machine shop have been painted, and it is a great improvement to that part of the village.

The building formerly used as a boot shop is to be converted into stores, and the upper part is to be used as a hall for some of the societies in town.

Mr. Metcalf of Brattleboro, Vt., who has been in the express office, has been obliged to leave on account of sickness. His place will be filled by Mr. Johnson of Warren.

The funeral of Mrs. Adams was held in West Brookfield Wednesday afternoon. She leaves two daughters, Mrs Day of this town, and Mrs. Fullum of West Brookfield.

The cards are out for the marriage of Miss Annie Hitchcock and Mr. George Tarbell, which will take place next Wednesday evening. Several other weddings are soon to follow.

Mrs. Caroline Hines was discovered dead in her residence Monday morning. She had hung herself and when found had probably been dead two hours. No cause for the act, only she was alone in the world, and had said that she did not know what would become of her. Probably this worried her until she became insane on the subject.

The G. A. R. post will commence the observance of Memorial Day at nine o'clock, and proceed to the cemetery, where the regular exercises will be conducted. The Woman's Relief Corps and the Sons of Veterans have been invited to join in the exercises, and contributions of flowers are solicited.

MONSON.

Number of dogs registered—150.

Frank Fenton has gone to work at Spencer.

Mrs. Rufus Cushman is visiting relatives in Worcester.

The store clerks play the Academy nine Memorial Day on Pease's lot.

Rev. H. W. Smith of Maine will preach in Central Hall Sunday at the usual hours.

The rain this week has been no respecter of persons, for it has sprinkled all places alike.

It is rumored that Mrs. Horatio Lyon is soon to take up her permanent residence in Springfield.

H. Chapin will relate his experiences of the war at the next meeting of the Marcus Keep post.

Chauncey L. Moore & Co., photographers, have a sample of their work in jeweler Bills' window.

G. H. Newton has been in Nantucket this week settling the estate of Dr. Ellis, being attorney for the heirs.

The house and lot of Mrs. S. W. Gardner on Main street was sold Monday to D. W. Ellis for $3400.

The class of '87 is arranging for an ice cream supper, to be given at Academy hall on the evening of June 10.

Gage & Reynolds have closed their straw shops after an unusually busy season of several weeks longer than last year.

C. S. Chandler, a long time professor of geology and astronomy at Suffield, Ct., institute, has been the guest of Erastus White the past week.

Joel Thompson and J. C. Parks have each secured fifteen names for a fire company, and a hook and ladder company is being organized by John McGuire, to have quarters near the Congregational church.

A sight seldom seen was witnessed on Main street Wednesday. One of our prominent physicians drove up the street, while just behind him was a funeral procession, and following in the rear of this was a drummer for grave stones.

The Young Men's Social club has chosen two base ball teams, and will play a game on Sullivan's lot next Monday, the defeated side paying for a supper at Cushman's hotel. The two nines are composed as follows: W. J. Randall, captain, C. W. King, C. F. Jordan, F. E. Walker, G. E. Knowlton, G. L. Flynt, R. C. Miller, Will Buffington, G. L. Jenks.; A. T. Robinson, captain, W. C. McKendrick, S. F. Cushman, Jr., F. E. Leonard, F. L. Bliss, A. L. Squier, Fred Fay, M. R. Lull, Fred Bradway.

The dedication of Monson academy will be held on the 27th of June. Prof. S. I. Curtis of Chicago will deliver the address, Rev. Dr. Storrs of Brooklyn being unable to do so. He will also deliver the sermon to the graduating class in the Congregational church. The graduating exercises of the senior class will be held Tuesday evening, the public examinations being held Monday and Tuesday. Fifteen students graduate this year, seven of whom will go to college. Wednesday afternoon and evening there will be a general reunion of the alumni of the academy.

It is noted that some farmers plant certain seeds in the old of the moon, and it is very important that there should be no mistake about it. By the accidental use of a last year's (or older) almanac great trouble might ensue. It is reported that one farmer who entrusted the almanac business to his wife, missed the mark by four or five days, and the result was that beet seed planted 50 feet away from the house had grown so as to crush in the cellar wall the next day after planting. A few kernels of corn had progressed so rapidly that under the melting rays of the sun they had forced themselves from the field into the barn, and there had literally become a sour mash and was arrested by the public's humble servant. Be sure when you plant in the old of the moon that your almanac has been properly adjusted to suit the times.

Marcus Keep Post, G. A. R., will meet at their hall Sunday afternoon at 1 o'clock, and proceed to the Methodist church, where Rev. Mr. Emerson will preach the usual sermon for the post. On Monday at 1 o'clock p. m., a delegation of the post will be at Moulton Hill cemetery, where Rev. Mr. Maxham will offer prayer and make a short address. Services at Memorial Hall will commence promptly at half-past two in the afternoon. Special orders from the national and department headquarters will be read by the adjutant, music will be furnished by the Monson Cornet band, and an address will be given by Rev. C. F. Woodworth, chaplain of the 27th Mass. Regt. Directly after the exercises in the hall the post will proceed to the Center cemetery and decorate the 33 graves there. The committee wish to announce that Memorial Hall will be open all Monday forenoon, when flowers can be left, and they hope special efforts will be made to procure as many as possible.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Ambrose Blair, one of our oldest citizens, died on Saturday, aged 84 years.

J. M. Bufflugton opened his dining rooms for the first time Thursday evening.

Memorial services will be held in the Methodist church next Sunday. It is expected that the Grand Army boys will attend in a body.

Building was never so brisk in Ware as at the present. Houses are going up on every hand, and still there seems to be a scarcity of tenements.

The Grand Army cleared about $75 from the presentation of the war drama "Newbern, or the Old Flag." Annabelle Lewis was completely taken by surprise on Friday evening by the presentation of a beautiful basket of flowers from the commander and comrades of J. W. Lawton post.

The half-holiday idea has taken a deep root in this community and is sure to grow. How far it may extend it would be rash to predict. Its influence cannot but be wholesome and beneficial, and it is hardly doubted that by reason of the stimulus which it will furnish as much work of all sorts will be done in five days and a half as has heretofore been done in six. It will be a fortunate thing when all classes of workers, whether by brain or hand, shall enjoy a half day of rest in every week in addition to Sunday, for the right use of which they will be better prepared by the hours of leisure on Saturday afternoon.—New York Tribune.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, May 25th, 1887.

From our Special Correspondent.

The Senate, after fixing the minimum first-class liquor license fee at $350 on Wednesday, on Thursday by a vote of 19 to 18 on motion of Senator Hartwell of Worcester, changed it again so that the minimum is $450 and the maximum $1400. That is nearly the same as it passed the House for the first-class, though the minimum of the other classes has been reduced to $100. It is probable that the House will concur.

The Fitchburg railroad company has put in a petition to compel all the railroads on the north side of Boston to unite in a union passenger station, and to abolish all grade crossings. The railroad committee has been instructed by the Senate to give a hearing on the petition.

Senator Hoar's petition, with the others, that the Beverly Farms bill be referred to the next Legislature, has been taken from the table and placed on file.

The Senate stands 7 to 18 against the bill of Senator Morse to close the saloons on legal holidays.

A bill has been hastily passed by the House to repeal that part of the registration law which the supreme court recently declared to be unconstitutional.—that forbidding registration within 30 days of naturalization.

Both Senate and House reached an agreement Friday on the bill to prevent the advertising of the business of procuring divorces. It does not apply to an attorney regularly admitted to the bar, and the exception was made to favor the one such lawyer in Boston who is engaged in that business.

The House, by 63 to 69 on roll call, has rejected the bill to prevent unjust and excessive fines for imperfect weaving. It was opposed by Messrs. Henry of Fall River, Ray of Franklin, Post of Lenox, and Taft of Uxbridge as hostile to the manufacturing interest and not demanded to remedy an evil. Messrs. Brandes of Webster and O'Connor of Worcester protested against the system of fining practiced in large mills, but a small majority of the House was against them.

In the debate on the weekly payments bill Friday in the House, it was said that the only systematic evasion of last year's law is by the Old Colony railroad. It was charged by Mr. Quincy of Quincy, who was supported by Mr. Walker of Worcester, that the road practically forced its employes to say that they did not care for payments every week, when they would prefer them weekly. Mr. Walker further said that if this was not stopped, all the other railroads in the state would follow suit. The bill was amended so as not to apply to coöperative associations where the employes are members of the associations. The bill itself did not come to a vote Friday.

In amount of legislative business transacted, this has been one of the busiest weeks of the season. On Monday afternoon came the promised veto by Gov. Ames of the Beverly Farms bill. He did not go into the merits of the bill at all, but based the veto solely on the ground that the measure was tainted by the large sum of money spent for its passage, and that parties desiring special legislation should come with clean hands. He was brief, clear and forcible. He says: "The strongest condemnation and the most effective remedy [those words were quoted from the House report as to the treatment proper for the lobby] I can apply is a veto. If the system thus condemned is to prevail and to be justified by executive approval of bills to which it has been most notoriously and offensively applied, then the lobbyist will understand it is an accepted and permissible system, involving no risk except that of being called hard names in a report."

On Tuesday the House voted 113 yeas to 99 nays to pass the bill over the veto,—not the necessary two-thirds. So the bill fails and the Beverly Farms people will come again next year for the third time to try their fortune. No speech of consequence was made before the vote, except Mr. Walker's of Worcester. He criticised the governor severely, saying that he had disgraced the Legislature and had gone beyond his constitutional authority in criticising the methods of the bill's passage. His duty lay with the merits of the bill. It was for the House to judge of the methods. He called attention to the fact that in the precisely similar case of the setting off of Cottage City from Edgartown Governor Ames was a large contributor [I am credibly informed that he was the largest] of funds.

Gov. Ames is in receipt of many letters from leading men all over the state with compliments for his veto. Just here, as a personal matter, having watched the whole case from beginning to end, I wish to say for myself that the veto was wrong, and that the governor has done a great injury to innocent people. A craze has swept over the state like the scare about Salem witchcraft, on a small scale, and when the people recover their senses they will see the blunder and wrong that has needlessly done. There was no occasion for an investigation. The Legislature was frightened into making and adopting a sensational report. That report increased the popular sentiment and the veto has capped the climax of the pitiful errors.

Opinions differ as to its effect on politics. With many, perhaps most, it will help the governor. One of the leading Republicans of the state, lately in the governor's council, predicts that it will cost Mr. Ames his reëlection. A Democrat like George M. Stearns, he says, would sweep the state. Whether the Democrats will renominate John F. Andrews on this turn of affairs remains to be seen.

The West End Land Company gets its bill with $12,500,000 stock, and many Boston people are kicking because they say that stock will be half water and the public will have to pay dividends on it.

Mr. Fred H. Williams, the counsel for Beverly Farms (as clean a man as there is in the state to-day, for all some people want him indicted) has just secured a triumph which may partially console him for the veto. By a unanimous vote the committee on towns rejected Wednesday a bill to divide Attleboro and make a new town of North Attleboro, and Williams is counsel for division. With a minority of five dissenting the committee also reported a bill to divide Medford and call the new town Brooks. But they reported also that the bill should go to the next Legislature.

The liquor committee, Senator Alger of Middlesex dissenting, has at last reported a prohibitory constitutional amendment in the Senate. It has been advanced one stage without debate, but will be debated June 1st.

By 57 to 105 the House has finally rejected the bill to regulate telephone rates.

The bill giving divorce jurisdiction to the superior and probate courts has gone through both branches without debate. The bills to amend the weekly payments law and to regulate fines for imperfect weaving have gone through the House. The House has substituted its high license bill for the Senate's, and will debate the matter next Wednesday. An adverse report has been made and accepted on exempting soldiers from civil service examinations. A bill has been reported for districts of two or more towns for common school superintendence. LANDON.

Mechanics, Laborers, Train Men, Farm Hands should never be without Pond's Extract, Invaluable in case of accidents, for cuts, burns, wounds, strains, broken limbs, etc. It is unsafe to use spurious imitations.

Springfield Dry Goods and Clothing Houses have all "struck for lower prices," and D. H. Brigham & Co. ask the privilege of making a "Few Remarks" which will be found in another column and under the head of "Springfield News and Gossip."

Broadhurst Bros. (Morse's Shoe Store) 376 Main St., Springfield, Mass., carry a stock of shoes so extensive that they are able to fit any customer to any price or style of shoe they may wish. Their womens' fine kid button boots at $1.50, $1.75 and $2.00 are going off like hot cakes.

Perhaps no local disease has puzzled and baffled the medical profession more than nasal catarrh. While not immediately fatal it is among the most distressing, nauseous and disgusting ills the flesh is heir to, and the records show very few or no cases of radical cure of chronic catarrh by any of the multitude of modes of treatment until the introduction of Ely's Cream Balm a few years ago. The success of this preparation has been most gratifying and surprising. 2w9

OUR WEALTHY MEN.

Much has been said in newspapers of men who have made large fortunes in comparatively a few years in various business interests. Many of these articles are written by correspondents of prominent newspapers, and copied into others of lesser note. Correspondents generally are seldom men of business qualifications, and wrongfully picture these men and their business as a thing of accident: this is not the case with those we have met. We find that where men have made large fortunes by their own business talent and industry they chose with sagacity and forethought such businesses as would lead to success when handled with business judgment. No man has been brought before the public as an example of success, both in wealth and magnitude of his business (outside of stock and railroad men) more prominently than Dr. G. G. Green of Woodbury, N. J. He is at the head of many large business industries, and yet comparatively a young man. When the fact that August Flower, for dyspepsia and liver complaint and Boschee's German Syrup, for coughs and lung troubles, has grown to a wonderful sale in all parts of the world, it proves that it was not an accident or spontaneous stroke at wealth. His medicines are recognized as valuable and established remedies and the business has grown gradually and permanently during the last eighteen years on account not alone of Dr. Green's abilities as a business man or his "good luck," but on the actual merits of the two preparations.—Copied from the N. Y. Weekly Sun, of Dec. 22, 1886.

Some Things Learned by Experience,

That a tablespoonful of salt thrown on a coal fire that is low, will cause it to burn up quickly. That you can clean oil cloth with milk and water; while soap and brush will ruin it. That the skin of a boiled egg is the best remedy you can apply to a boil. That you can't cure Rheumatism or Neuralgia without taking Menard's Rheumatic Bullets. That you can buy them of LeGro & Lynde for $1 00 per bottle. eow7

ENJOY LIFE.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens and oceans, and thousands of means of enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health; but how often do the majority of people feel like giving up disheartened, discouraged and worn out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily find satisfactory proof, that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint are the direct causes of seventy-five per cent of such maladies as biliousness, Indigestion, sick headache, costiveness, nervous prostration, dizziness of the head, palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10c. Try it. 1y46eow

SPRINGFIELD NEWS AND GOSSIP.

D. H. BRIGHAM & CO.

Make their bow, and crave the privilege of a few remarks. Their claim of being the oldest and most extensive Clothiers, Hatters, Furriers, Furnishers and Outfitters in Western New England was settled years ago, beyond dispute. Their trade, by mail or otherwise, extends to nearly every state in the Union. They keep pace with the times, and so anticipate their patrons' wants that they can always supply them with fashionable and reliable outfits, minus "Extravagant Tailors' Bills." It is their study to constantly offer something new and stylish, and still keep their prices within reach of the masses.

"Man Wants but Little here Below,"

But he is very particular about that little. Scarcely an old garment can be found in Brigham & Co's Men's Department, which contains the largest and best range of New Fancy Suits, and full lines of Genuine Scotch Goods, in Frock, Sack and Double-breasted Sack Suits. Full-dress suits have a place there, and so do the "Prince Albert" Double-breasted Frock Coats, in slender sizes, and large enough to fit a fifty-inch breast measurement.

WHO SAYS THEY HAVE NOTHIMG TO DO WITH THE CASE,

Those fine Spring Overcoats, which are constantly in stock? Blue and Grand Army Suits are a specialty. The firm control the "McMillan" pantaloon agency for Western Massachusetts, and their customers make their selection from thousands of single pantaloons (not in suits).

When Charles Dudley Warner Wrote "Being a Boy"

He little thought the time would come so soon when boys can be elegantly clothed at a nominal price. Brigham & Co. have not only the staple patterns, but also the rare styles in boys' furnishings, such as short-pant suits up to 16 years, and Bicycle pants up to 34-inch waist, three-piece dress suits in short pants, genuine Scotch (English roll) short-pant suits up to 16 years. Kilt overcoats

DELIGHT A MOTHER'S HEART

And fill the measure of a small boys' pride, as do Kilt suits, with Blouse, Norfolk and Vest-front waists, in new material and superior workmanship. A new and elegant stock of Spring and Summer hats is shown for Men, Boys and Children. Bought by the case and direct from the manufactures, one profit is saved the customer in every instance.

YOUR BEST GIRL

Knows that for genuine comfort there is nothing like the real Mexican Hammock, and it is your duty to introduce her to the "Bay State Perfection Hammock," which Brigham & Co. sell for a little above the cost of worthless imitations, an investment of a sum ranging from 75 cents to $5, including ropes and stretchers.

BRIM FULL

Of choice novelties from the Old World is their Furnishing Goods Department for men's and boys' wear. They display the most celebrated American lines of shirts, collars, cuffs, neckwear, gloves, underwear, half-hose, dressing robes and smoking-jackets. They pride themselves on fine silks, alpaca and gingham umbrellas, not to mention as desirable rubber and waterproof clothing as can be found in any Furnishing Goods Establishment.

SPRINGFIELD NEEDS A NEW DEPOT,

Because there is not a train leaving the old one that does not carry a representation of Brigham & Co's. immense stock of trunks and traveling bags, their solid, sole-leather trunks and alligator bags for men and women.

ALL SUMMER LONG

their cloak room is kept open to supply the popular demand for a higher grade of Top Garments for women and children, fine imported wraps, jackets, shawlettes and Fischus, Paris Models, the display being richer than ever before. They are pleased to show the best American manufactures, with misses' and children's sizes, and they have contracted for an entire stock of white suits, (manufacturers' samples) including children's sizes, which will be sold at half-price.

The Decks Will be Cleared

this season, just as they always are, nothing being carried over. And the clearing process has already begun; goods that do not sell quickly will be reduced in price, even being marked down to less than half their value, for the sake of securing fast sales and making room for fresh installments. Business can be done by mail just as well as otherwise, all goods being warranted as represented, or the money refunded. During this special sale the terms are invariably, cash on delivery.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN, SS. PROBATE COURT.—To all persons interested in the estate of Mabel L. Graves and Edna Graves both of Palmer, in said county, minors, Greeting:

Whereas, Justus Hitchcock, the guardian of said minors, has presented for allowance the fifth account of his said guardianship and requests that his four accounts heretofore presented and ordered filed and recorded may be taken from the files and allowed.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Springfield, in said county, on the first Wednesday of June next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why the same should not be allowed. And said guardian is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper printed at Palmer, three weeks successively, the last publication to be two days, at least, before said Court, and to mail a copy hereof to each of you who may live out of this county, fourteen days at least before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this eleventh day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven.

The Economical Girl.

She's a dashing little student
Of economy, and prudent,
In a most painstaking fashion,
I would really have you know;
And she looked with eyes upglancing,
Most bewitchingly entrancing,
And my thoughts flew back to courtship,
Many happy years ago;
Soon her gaze grew fond and fonder,
And then I began to ponder
Some sweet words I'd whisper to her
Of a liberty I'd take;
But she smiled a smile Platonic
As she said in words laconic:
"What a splendid lot of carpet rag
Your overcoat would make!"

WHISKY MURDERS.

The news of the assassination of Dr. Northup, a prohibitionist, at Haverhill, Scioto, county Ohio, by a family of rumsellers, is certain to quicken the movement against the rum power throughout the country. Few events have done more to reinforce this agitation than the murder of the Rev. John Haddock, another active Prohibitionist, by saloon men at Sioux City, Iowa. The Prohibition organs everywhere, of course, utilized the tragedy, and the resort to murder by any representatives of the drink evil reflected a new stigma upon the entire whisky interest. The cowardly and brutal killing of Dr. Northup will inevitable extend and deepen this feeling. The friends of total abstinence will not pause to draw distinction, but will fix the responsibility for both crimes upon the liquor interest as a whole, and will no doubt find much support in this cause. The killing of Dr. Northup appears to have been deliberate, and as dastardly as a combined attack with deadly weapons upon an unarmed man necessarily must be. The ruffianism of the deed will excite no less horror and indignation than the alleged motive of it, namely, the removal of a man who had made himself specially obnoxious to the rumsellers by his efforts in behalf of prohibition. As a murder it deserves, and will doubtless receive, the heaviest legal punishment. As a whisky murder it will tell strongly against the whisky cause everywhere.

Nor is it certain that the holding to account for such crimes of the liquor interest generally so unfair as it may seem at a first glance. For it must be considered that this traffic is one which necessarily attracts and enlists the lowest elements of the community. The saloon keeper in politics has made the country acquainted with those elements in the most startling way. It has put over the heads of the best citizens the vilest, most ignorant, brutal and venal. It has disfranchised intellect and virtue often, and given the control of the goverment to vice and stupidity. It has systematized plunder and corruption, and lifted demagogues and knaves into power at the sacrifice of the public interests. In many cities it has so fortified the criminal classes that they have been enabled for years to defy all efforts after reform; and in more than one instance it has been necessary to have recourse to violent methods to dislodge them. It is therefore no exaggeration to say that the employment of the worst instrumentalities, in the worst ways, belongs naturally to the prosecution of the combat in which the rum power is now engaged. And the further its representatives are from the centers of civilization the remoter their location in country regions, the more apt will they be to revert to the rowdyism and ruffianism of their lowest type, as in the Haddock and Northup cases.—N. Y. Tribune.

A LARGE FEE.

Yesterday a ragged, unkempt, newsboy pulled the bell of No. 247 Lexington avenue, the residence of Dr. Geo. F. Shrady, and asked the servant if "the Doc was in." Just then, Dr. Shrady emerged from the parlor, and the newsboy made a rush at him with an upturned thumb.

"What's the matter, boy?" asked the doctor.

"Pisened thumb, doctor," answered the youth.

"How?"

"Cat."

"H'm! come in."

The gamin marched into the study and had his "pisened" thumb duly doctored. During the process he explained that he had been chasing a cat.

"I cornered the old Tom in an ash barrel," continued the newsboy, "an' jes' as I was pullin' the black cuss out by his tail he goes back on hisself, turns around and gives me an almighty bite."

"Why did you come to me?" asked Dr. Shrady.

"Oh! I didn't want to go to any o' them common fizzishuns."

"But uncommon physicians want uncommon fees," said the doctor, eyeing the urchin; "how much have you got?"

The boy dived into his ragged trousers pocket, fished out some cents and held them in his open, dirty hand. Dr. Shrady smiled and told him to put them back.

"Say, Doc," said the lad, determined to pay something; "here take a "Daily Noos," and he flopped one on the table. Just as he got to the door of the study, he suddenly turned back and said: "Say, Doctor, I got 'nother left; yer might ters well have this," and he flopped the second "Daily Noos" on the table. Then he paddled off to the front door, hitching up his trousers, but a thought seemed to strike him suddenly, and turning back he peered in at the door and said, as he pulled a lock of his hair:—

"Say, Doc, I'se forgot to thank yez."

Dr. Shrady has had many rich patients, but this is the first time he has had a patient's whole stock in trade as a fee.—New York Herald.

Giving to God is no loss; it is putting your substance in the best bank.—C. H. Spurgeon.

When we walk toward the sun of Truth, all shadows are cast behind us.—Longfellow.

Worth Remembering.

Every inspiration of the lungs, every pulse-throb of the heart, every sweep of the arm—even our very thoughts as they speed through the brain, all create waste matter that must be constantly removed if there is to be that beautiful harmony of functional effort which constitutes health. Nature's remedy is the sure and eminently wise one, of expelling, by proper purgation, the humors which cause disease, and Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets" are nature's great ally in the cure of digestive disturbances, and an unfailing remedy for constipation and its pernicious effects.

PECULIAR

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to and other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One hundred doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad; no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Be sure to get

How to Commence

HOUSEKEEPING

WITHOUT MONEY

Enough to pay for the entire purchase at once can be learned at our establishment.

The Means we Have adopted to do this, were commenced twelve years ago at the earnest solicitation of many customers, who did not want to spare the money all at once or wait until they could get it all together before purchasing. It has been in successful operation ever since, increasing in popularity with merchants, professional men, clerks, workmen and the public generally.

People with a Moderate

income can furnish their homes without spending a large sum of money at one time; they can select from our immense stocks at the lowest

CASH PRICES.

A small portion down and the balance weekly or monthly, is the means by which we are enabled to sell everyone, without risk to ourselves or publicly to them. It is simply guaranteed payment; we running no risks, are enabled to sell our goods for

Cash or Installment

at a small margin above cost, and as our profits are not dependent upon one branch of the

House Furnishing

business alone, but bearing a proportional part, we can sell you each article as low as goods of like quality in New York or Boston.

THE LIFE FOOD

of the century, is the name applied to Dr. R. C. Flower's Nerve and Brain Pills by one who has been cured by them when the leading physicians could do no more.

Nervous Prostrations.
Loss of Brain Power.
Wreck of Body & Mind.

These are the terrible fruits of this age of lightning activity, where man lives ten years in one and grows gray in a day; but these terrible conditions are immediately arrested, and the shattered system restored, when Dr. R. C. Flower's Nerve and Brain Pills are taken regularly. Read every word from the following well-known business man of Boston, A. A. ROWE, Central Wharf, Boston.

"Dr. Flower's Nerve Pills have done for me what the best medical talent of Philadelphia and Boston could not accomplish. They have entirely cured me of a nervous prostration which was the curse of my life, and wholly unfit me for business. Every pill is worth its worth in gold."

The Old Homestead.

Ah! here it is, the dear old place!
Unchanged through all these years,
How like some sweet, familiar face,
My childhood home appears.
The grand old trees beside the door
Still spread their branches wide,
The river wanders as of yore,
With sweetly running tide.
The distant hills look green and gay,
The flowers are blooming wild;
And everything looks glad to-day
As when I was a child.

Regardless how the years have flown,
Half wondering I stand,
I catch no fond, endearing tone,
I clasp no friendly hand;
I think my mother's smile to meet,
I list my father's call,
I pause to hear my brother's feet
Come bounding through the hall;
But silence all around me reigns,
A chill creeps through my heart;
No trace of those I love remains,
And tears unbidden start.

What though the sunbeams fall as fair,
What though the budding flowers
Still shed their fragrance on the air
Within life's golden hours;
The loving ones that clustered here
These walls may not restore;
Voices that filled my youthful ear
Will greet my soul no more,
And yet I quit the dear old place
With slow and lingering tread,
As when we kiss a clay-cold face
And leave it with the dead.

BACKBONE AND GRIT.

"The stage has gone, sir, but there is a widow lives here, and she has got a boy, and he will drive you over. He is a nice little fellow, and Deacon Ball lets him have his team for a trifle and we like to have him get a job when we can."

It was a hot day in July. Away up among the hills that make the lower slope of the Monadnock mountain a friend lay very ill. In order to reach his temporary home, one must take an early train to the nearest station, and trust to the lumbering old coach that made a daily trip to K——. The train was late, the stage, after waiting for some time, was gone. The landlord of the little white hotel appeared in his shirt sleeves, and, leaning his elbow on the balcony rail, dropped down on the hot and thirsty traveler what comfort could be extracted from the opening sentence of my sketch.

"Would you not come in and have some dinner?" "Yes." "Would he send for the deacon's team?" "Yes." "And the boy?' "Yes."

And the dinner was eaten and the team came around—an open buggy and an old white horse, and just as we were seated the door of the little brown house across the way opened, and out rushed the "widow's boy."

In his mouth the last morsel of his dinner, he had evidently learned how to "eat and run." His feet were clad in last winter's much worn boots, whose wrinkled legs refused to stay within the limits of his narrow faded trousers. As his legs flew forward his arms flew backward in an ineffectual struggle to get himself inside a jacket much too short in the sleeves.

"There he is," said the hostler, "that's the Widow Beebe's boy. I told him I'd hold the horse while he went to get a bite."

The horse didn't look as if he needed to be held, but the hostler got his dime, and the boy approached in time to relieve my mind as to whether he would conquer the jacket or the jacket would conquer him and turn him wrong side out.

He was sun burned and freckled, large-mouthed and red-haired—a homely, plain, wretched little Yankee boy; and yet, as we rode through the deep summer bloom and fragrance of the shaded road, winding up the long hills in the glow of the afternoon sun, I learned such a lesson from the little fellow as I shall not soon forget.

He did not look much like a preacher as he sat stooping forward a little, whisking the flies from the deacon's horse, but his sermon was one which I wish might be heard by all the boys in the land. As it was, I had to spur him on now and then by questions to get him to tell all about himself.

"My father died, you see, and left my mother the little brown house opposite the tavern. You saw it, didn't you, sir—the one with the lilac bushes under the window? Father was sick for a long time, and when he could not work he had to raise money on the house. Deacon Ball let him have it, a little at the time, and when father was gone, mother found the money owed was about $300. At first she thought she would have to give up the house, but the deacon said, 'Let it wait awhile, and he turned and patted me on the head, 'When Johnny gets big enough to earn something I shall expect him to pay it.' I was only nine and am thirteen now; I remember mother cried and said: 'Yes, deacon, Johnny is my only hope now;' I wondered and wondered what work I could do. I really felt as if I ought to commence at once, but I could not think of anything to do."

"Well, what did you do?" I asked quickly, for I was afraid he would stop, and I wanted to hear the rest.

"Well, at first I did very funny things for a boy, mother used to knit socks to sell, and she sewed the rags to make rag carpets, and I helped."

"How? What could you do?"

"Well, the people who would like a carpet could not always get the time to make it. So I went to the houses among the farmers and took home their rags, old coats and everything they had, and out in the woodshed I ripped and cut them up, and sometimes I sewed some, too; and then I rolled them into balls and took them back to the owners all ready to be woven into rugs."

"But did they pay you for your work?"

"Oh, yes, we got so much per pound; and I felt quite like a young merchant when I weighed them out with our own steelyards. But that was only one way; we've two or three old apple trees out in the back yard by the wall, and we dried the apples and sold them. Then some of the farmers who had a good many apples began to send them to us to dry, and we paid them so many pounds all dry, and had the rest to sell."

"But you could not do much in ways like these?"

"No, not much, but something; then we had the knitting."

"Did you knit?"

"Not at first, but after awhile mother began to have the rheumatism in her hands, and the joints became swollen and her fingers twisted, and it hurt her to move them. Then I learned to knit; before that I wound the yarn for her. I had learned to sew a little, too, for mother didn't like to see the holes without patches."

And he looked half smilingly at the specimens on his knees.

"But you did not mend those?" I asked.

"Yes, sir; but I was in a hurry, and mother said it was not done as it had ought to be. They had just been washed, and I could not wait for them to dry.

"Who washed them?"

"I did, and ironed them, too. I can wash and iron almost as good as mother can. She don't mean to let me, but how is she going to help it? She can hardly use her hands at all, and some days she can hardly leave her chair, and so I had to learn to make the beds and to scrub the floor and wash the dishes, and I can do almost as well as a girl."

"Is it possible? I shall have to take supper with you on my way back to the city and test your skill."

Johnny blushed and I added:

It is a pity, my boy, that you haven't a sister."

"I had one," he said gently, but she died; and—if she had lived I shouldn't have wished her to lift and bring wood and water and scrub, as poor mother always did. Sometimes I wish I could have sprung all the way from a baby to a man. It's such slow work growing up; and it was while mother was waiting for us to grow up that she worked so hard.

"But, my dear boy, you cannot expect to be son and daughter and mother all at once. You cannot do the work for a whole family."

"Yes I can; it isn't much, and I'm going to do it and the work my father left undone. I'm going to pay that mortgage, if I live."

"Heaven grant you may," I said fervently under my breath; "for not many mothers have such a son."

"Mother don't know I mean to do it, and she is very anxious I should go to school, and I mean to some time, but I know just where the boys in my class are studying, and I get the lessons at home. Mother reads them to me out of the book, while I am washing the dishes or doing her work, and we have great fun. I try to remember and repeat it, and if we come to anything we can't make out, take I it over to the teacher in the evening, she is very kind—and she tells me."

"Very kind! Who wouldn't be kind to such a boy? How do you expect to save if you spend your time indoors?"

"Oh, I don't do girl's work all day; no indeed! I have worked out our taxes on the roads. It wasn't much, but I helped the men build a stone wall down by the river; and Deacon Ball lets me do a great deal of work for him, and when I get a chance to take anybody from the hotel to ride, he lets me have his team for almost nothing, and I would pay to him whatever I make. And I work on the farm with the men in summer; and I have a cow of my own and sell the milk at the tavern, and we have some hens, too, and sell the eggs. And in the fall I cut and pile the winter's wood in the sheds for the people who haven't any boys, and there's a good many people around here who haven't any boys," he added, brushing a fly from the old horse with the tip of his whip.

After this we fell into silence and rode through the sweet New England roads, with Monadnock rising before us, ever near us and more majestic. It impressed me with a sense of its rugged strength—one of the hills, "rock-ribbed and ancient as the sun; "but I glanced from the mountain to the little red-headed morsel of humanity at my side, with a sort of recognition of their kinship. Somehow they seemed to belong together. I felt as if the same sturdy stuff was in both of them. It was only a fancy, but it was confirmed the next day, for when I came back to town after seeing my invalid friend, I called on Deacon Ball. I found him white haired and kindly faced. He kept the village store and owned a pretty house, and was evidently very well to do. Naturally we talked of Johnny, and the deacon said to me with tears in his old watery blue eyes:

"Why, bless your heart, sir, you don't think I'm going to take his money, do you? The only son of his mother, and she a widow, and tied up into double bow knots with rheumatics, besides! True enough I let his father have the money and my wife she says, says she to me, 'Well, deacon, my dear, we've not got a child and shall be just as well off a hundred years from now if the widow never pays a cent; but 'cording to my calculations it's better to let the boy think he's payin'. She says I might as well try to keep a barrel of vinegar from workin' as to keep that boy from workin'. It's the mother in him and it's got to work. We think a good deal of the widow, Mandy and me. I did before I saw Mandy; but for all that we hold the mortgage, and Johnny wants to work it out. Mandy and me, we are going to let him work."

I turned away, for I was going to sup at Johnny's house; but before I went I asked the deacon how much Johhny had already paid.

"Well I don't know; Mandy knows—I pass it to her, she keeps the books. Drop in before you go to the train and I'll show it to you."

I dropped in and the deacon showed me the account. It was the book of the savings bank of a neighboring town, and on pages were credits of all the little sums the boy had earned or paid; and I saw they were standing in the Widow Beebe's name. I grasped the deacon's hand. He was looking away over the housetops to where Monadnock was smiling under the good night kiss of the sun.

"Goodbye sir, goodbye," he said, returning my squeeze with interest. Much obliged I am sure, Mandy and me, too; but don't you be worried about Johnnie. When we see it we know the real stuff it takes to make a real man—and Johnny has got it; Johnny is like that mountain over there—chock full of grit and lots of backbone.—N. Y. World.

A TRIP DOWN THE COLUMBIA RIVER.

COLUMBIA RIVER, ORE., April 23, 1887.

Mr. Editor:—When a boy attending district No. 6, in Ware, I learned in geography something about the Columbia river, away in the extreme northwest corner of the United States. Since then I have oftentimes read of the wonderful stream, its scenery, and its salmon fisheries. This morning I find myself on this same wonderful river, on the stern-wheel steamer, S. G. Reed, en route from Portland to Astoria. Portland, is a bright and thriving city of 40,000 people, and is 100 miles from the mouth of the Columbia; Astoria, a small city of 5000 people, just at the mouth of the river where it pours its pure waters into the great Pacific. We left Portland this morning at 6 o'clock and are making about 12 miles an hour down the river. The first twelve miles was on the Willamette river down to its junction with the Columbia. The day is perfect, the air is filled with the perfume of the spring wild flowers. The banks of the river seem to have already put on their summer dress. The trees are in full foliage and a beautiful green covers all the open country. The river seems to be fully three-quarters of a mile in width. Forests of fir trees cover the banks most of the way.

A little way down the stream I see a row boat with two men, and the steamer seems to be slowing up as if she would stop in mid-stream for a row boat. Yes, she stops; the men in the row boat throw a line and make fast to the big steamer. They have brought their cargo to put on board. I watch them as they throw on our boat ten beautiful salmon. They are beauties indeed, varying in weight from twenty to fifty pounds. They are caught in gill nets during the night, and sent down to the canneries at Astoria.

Here we touch at St. Helens a small station on the left bank, where the entire people and industry is connected with a small saw mill. To the right, and apparently not more than five miles away (though really twenty-five, I suppose,) stands Mt. St. Helens. It seems to stand as a faithful sentry in this beautiful gateway. All about its base the forest is wearing a perpetual evergreen. But all the way up its steep sides from where the timber ceases it is covered with perpetual snow. It seems to rise from out the small cluster of hills about its base, as a grand and faithful monitor, introduced by the influences which move all nature elsewhere. Within sight and twenty-five miles further inland stands Mt. Hood, the big brother of Mt. St. Helens.

Here again we stop in mid-stream and from a small row boat there is put on board eighteen more splendid specimens of the Columbia's kingly fish. These two fishermen with their boat and nets have toiled all night and caught but these eighteen—but such fish. Now and then we pass a little hamlet cut out of the forest, where the fruit trees are in full bloom, and where the people manufacture lumber, grow fruit and catch salmon.

We now stop at a wood station on the south bank and take on twelve cords of fir wood to feed the hungry engines. This wood has come down the steep bluff, almost perpendicular, in a shoot of several hundred feet. It is very much like our yellow pine, and sells for $2 50 per cord to the passing boats.

As we near the mouth of the river the canning factories increase in number. These consist of a few rude buildings where the salmon, which are caught in the vicinity, are prepared for market. (We have fully a ton on board taken up along the river.) Here we come in sight of Astoria, spread along the bank of the river and up the steep bluffs. It is three miles long and very narrow. The salmon fisheries are the principal industry. During the months of April, May, June and July the fish are caught, not less than 500 men giving their time to fishing, and nearly as many more to the canning. The fishing is done with nets thrown out from row boats. The net is thrown out across a part of the stream, neither end made fast, but allowed to float with the stream, the lead line at the bottom and the wooden floats on top keeping it in a perpendicular position. The meshes are not less than six inches. The fish swimming up the stream strikes the net and attempts to run through it and is caught by the gills in the meshes of the net, and in his efforts to free himself soon attracts the attention of the fishermen who is near by in his boat and on the watch for just this. The fisherman pulls to the place and lifts a forty pound salmon into the boat, replacing the net for the next finny traveler. The fish are caught mostly in the night. At about eight o'clock in the morning the fleet of boats come in with their loads of fish. These are sold to the canneries without regard to size for 90 cents each. At the canneries they are cleaned, dressed, cut up, put in cans, cooked, sealed and boxed for market by Chinamen. Most of the fishing is done by Norwegians. They are expert and hardy, and make very good citizens. I was heartily welcomed at the wharf on arrival, by the general secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association. Soon after I was introduced to the generous hospitality of a Massachusetts man and was given the privilege of sharing in three well attended services on Sunday, and returning to Portland on Monday. W. E. LEWIS.

MR. BEECHER ON DANCING.

People ask me frequently; "Do you think there is any harm in dancing?" "No, I do not. There is much good in it. "Do you then, object to dancing parties?" No; in themselves, I do not. But where unknit youth, unripe muscle, unsettled and unhardened nerves, are put through an excess of excitement, treated with stimulants, fed irregularly and with unwholesome food, surrounded with gayety which is excessive, and which is protracted through hours when they should be asleep, I object, not because of the dancing, but because of the dissipation. It is taking the time that unquestionably was intended for sleep, and spending it in the highest state of exhilaration and excitement. The harm is not in the dancing itself; for if they danced as do the peasants, in the open air, upon the grass under the trees, and in the day, it might be commended not as virtuous, but still as belonging to those negative things that may be beautiful. But the wassail in the night, the wastefulness—I will not say of precious hours, for hours are not half so precious as nerves are—the dissipation, continued night after night, and week after week through the whole season, it is this I deprecate as eating out the very life. I am not superstitious of observances, but I am always thankful that there are forty days of lent in the year, when folks can rest from their debauches and dissipations; when no round of excessive excitement in the pursuit of pleasure is permitted to come in and ruin the health and cripple the natural powers of the young.—Henry Ward Beecher.

HE KNEW HER SISTER.

Mrs. Dollinger, a Sioux Falls lady, who lives on 12th street, heard a rap at the front door the other afternoon, and responded to find a very distinguished looking gentleman, extremely dignified and handsome.

"Ah! Mrs. Dollinger, I believe," he said.

"Yes, sir."

"My name is Harcourt. I live at Huron. Mrs. Scott of that place is your sister, is she not?"

"Yes, sir."

"Ah, yes, I am very well acquainted with her. She requested me to call and do a little errand for her."

"Oh, yes; won't you step in, Mr. Harcourt?"

"Thank you, I believe I will. Very fine weather we're having."

"Yes, sir. Take the easy chair."

"Thank you—pray don't put yourself to any trouble on my account."

"Certainly not. Was my sister well when you left?"

"Quite well, I'm pleased to say. By the way, Mrs. Dollinger, I have a little work here which I would like to show, as I am sure you would be interested in it, it is called 'Daniel in the Lion's Den," and it is by the Rev. Thomas R. Deuteronomy, and it comes in twelve parts, exquisitely bound in cloth, leather or extra Russia, is finely illustrated and should be in every library and I am taking hundreds of orders, as you can see by examining this order book, and everybody is wild over it and all pronounce it the most wonderful book written since the Holy Scriptures, it treats of Daniel in ten stages, when he started to go into the den, when he got a little further in, when he got clear in, when the lions came up to examine him, while they were making their survey, while they retired to consult together, when they decided a post mortem would be necessary, when they announced the result to Daniel, when he convinced them that he would not consent to an autopsy, when the lions retired and Daniel got out, embellished with numerous cuts, plans, maps and beautiful steel engravings, comes at $1 a part or $12 for the entire work, put your name down here and pay as you receive each part, 11 parts now ready—here is a fountain pen, write under Mr. Brown's name at the bottom of the page."

"Mr. Harcourt," said Mrs. Dollinger, rising and suppressing her tears, "you're a mean, deceitful book agent! Get out of my house!"

"I know, but just sign—"

"Go on, or I shall scream!"

"Certainly, certainly, if you insist, no offense. But can you tell me the name of the lady next door and where some of her family live? Ah, won't eh? I'll work another scheme, them. Good day, Mrs. Dollinger, good day, glad to have made your acquaintance!"—Dakota Bell.

NO FEAR, NO HOPE.

Robert Owen once visited a gentleman who was a believer. In walking out, they came to the gentleman's family grave. Owen, addressing him, said: "There is one advantage I have over Christians—I am not afraid to die. Most Christians are afraid to die; but if some of my business were settled, I should be perfectly willing to die at any moment." "Well," said his companion, you say you have no fear in death; have you any hope in death?" After a solemn pause, he replied, "No!" "Then," replied the gentleman, pointing to an ox standing near, "you are on a level with that brute; he has fed till he is satisfied, and stands in the shade whisking off the flies, and has neither hope nor fear."—Old Testament Anecdotes.

"Oh, give us a rest," said a young man impatiently, to a little boy who was busy plying him with questions. The little fellow looked at him a moment, and then, with the utmost innocence, said: "Well, you rest and I'll talk."—Columbia (S. C.) Record.

How to Commence

HOUSEKEEPING

WITHOUT MONEY

Enough to pay for the entire purchase at once can be learned at our establishment.

The Means we Have adopted to do this, were commenced twelve years ago at the earnest solicitation of many customers, who did not want to spare the money all at once or wait until they could get it all together before purchasing. It has been in successful operation ever since, increasing in popularity with mer-chants, professional men, clerks, workmen and the public generally.

People with a Moderate

income can furnish their homes without spending a large sum of money at one time; they can select from our immense stocks at the lowest

CASH PRICES.

A small portion down and the balance weekly or monthly, is the means by which we are enabled to sell everyone, without risk to ourselves or publicly to them. It is simply guaranteed payment; we running no risks, are enabled to sell our goods for

Cash or Installment

at a small margin above cost, and as our profits are not dependent upon one branch of the

House Furnishing

business alone, but bearing a proportional part, we can sell you each article as low as goods of like quality in New York or Boston.

The Old Homestead.

Ah! here it is, the dear old place!
Unchanged through all these years,
How like some sweet, familiar face,
My childhood home appears.
The grand old trees beside the door
Still spread their branches wide,
The river wanders as of yore,
With sweetly running tide.
The distant hills look green and gay,
The flowers are blooming wild;
And everything looks glad to-day
As when I was a child.

Regardless how the years have flown,
Half wondering I stand,
I catch no fond, endearing tone,
I clasp no friendly hand;
I think my mother's smile to meet,
I list my father's call,
I pause to hear my brother's feet
Come bounding through the hall;
But silence all around me reigns,
A chill creeps through my heart;
No trace of those I love remains,
And tears unbidden start.

What though the sunbeams fall as fair,
What though the budding flowers
Still shed their fragrance on the air
Within life's golden hours;
The loving ones that clustered here
These walls may not restore;
Voices that filled my youthful ear
Will greet my soul no more,
And yet I quit the dear old place
With slow and lingering tread,
As when we kiss a clay-cold face
And leave it with the dead.

BACKBONE AND GRIT.

"The stage has gone, sir, but there is a widow lives here, and she has got a boy, and he will drive you over. He is a nice little fellow, and Deacon Ball lets him have his team for a trifle and we like to have him get a job when we can."

It was a hot day in July. Away up among the hills that make the lower slope of the Monadnock mountain a friend lay very ill. In order to reach his temporary home, one must take an early train to the nearest station, and trust to the lumbering old coach that made a daily trip to K——. The train was late, the stage, after waiting for some time, was gone. The landlord of the little white hotel appeared in his shirt sleeves, and, leaning his elbow on the balcony rail, dropped down on the hot and thirsty traveler what comfort could be extracted from the opening sentence of my sketch.

"Would you not come in and have some dinner?" "Yes." "Would he send for the deacon's team?" "Yes." "And the boy?" "Yes."

And the dinner was eaten and the team came around—an open buggy and an old white horse, and just as we were seated the door of the little brown house across the way opened, and out rushed the "widow's boy."

In his mouth the last morsel of his dinner, he had evidently learned how to "eat and run." His feet were clad in last winter's much worn boots, whose wrinkled legs refused to stay within the limits of his narrow faded trousers. As his legs flew forward his arms flew backward in an ineffectual struggle to get himself inside a jacket much too short in the sleeves.

"There he is," said the hostler, "that's the Widow Beebe's boy. I told him I'd hold the horse while he went to get a bite."

The horse didn't look as if he needed to be held, but the hostler got his dime, and the boy approached in time to relieve my mind as to whether he would conquer the jacket or the jacket would conquer him and turn him wrong side out.

He was sun burned and freckled, large-mouthed and red-haired—a homely, plain, wretched little Yankee boy; and yet, as we rode through the deep summer bloom and fragrance of the shaded road, winding up the long hills in the glow of the afternoon sun, I learned such a lesson from the little fellow as I shall not soon forget.

He did not look much like a preacher as he sat stooping forward a little, whisking the flies from the deacon's horse, but his sermon was one which I wish might be heard by all the boys in the land. As it was, I had to spur him on now and then by questions to get him to tell all about himself.

"My father died, you see, and left my mother the little brown house opposite the tavern. You saw it, didn't you, sir—the one with the lilac bushes under the window? Father was sick for a long time, and when he could not work he had to raise money on the house. Deacon Ball let him have it, a little at the time, and when father was gone, mother found the money owed was about $300. At first she thought she would have to give up the house, but the deacon said, 'Let it wait awhile, and he turned and patted me on the head, 'When Johnny gets big enough to earn something I shall expect him to pay it.' I was only nine and am thirteen now; I remember mother cried and said: 'Yes, deacon, Johnny is my only hope now;' I wondered and wondered what work I could do. I really felt as if I ought to commence at once, but I could not think of anything to do."

"Well, what did you do?" I asked quickly, for I was afraid he would stop, and I wanted to hear the rest.

"Well, at first I did very funny things for a boy, mother used to knit socks to sell, and she sewed the rags to make rag carpets, and I helped."

"How? What could you do?"

"Well, the people who would like a carpet could not always get the time to make it. So I went to the houses among the farmers and took home their rags, old coats and everything they had, and out in the woodshed I ripped and cut them up, and sometimes I sewed some, too; and then I rolled them into balls and took them back to the owners all ready to be woven into rugs."

"But did they pay you for your work?"

"Oh, yes, we got so much per pound; and I felt quite like a young merchant when I weighed them out with our own steelyards. But that was only one way; we've two or three old apple trees out in the back yard by the wall, and we dried the apples and sold them. Then some of the farmers who had a good many apples began to send them to us to dry, and we paid them so many pounds all dry, and had the rest to sell."

"But you could not do much in ways like these?"

"No, not much, but something; then we had the knitting."

"Did you knit?"

"Not at first, but after awhile mother began to have the rheumatism in her hands, and the joints became swollen and her fingers twisted, and it hurt her to move them. Then I learned to knit; before that I wound the yarn for her. I had learned to sew a little, too, for mother didn't like to see the holes without patches."

And he looked half smilingly at the specimens on his knees.

"But you did not mend those?" I asked.

"Yes, sir; but I was in a hurry, and mother said it was not done as it had ought to be. They had just been washed, and I could not wait for them to dry.

"Who washed them?"

"I did, and ironed them, too. I can wash and iron almost as good as mother can. She don't mean to let me, but how is she going to help it? She can hardly use her hands at all, and some days she can hardly leave her chair, and so I had to learn to make the beds and to scrub the floor and wash the dishes, and I can do almost as well as a girl."

"Is it possible? I shall have to take supper with you on my way back to the city and test your skill."

Johnny blushed and I added:

It is a pity, my boy, that you haven't a sister."

"I had one," he said gently, but she died; and—if she had lived I shouldn't have wished her to lift and bring wood and water and scrub, as poor mother always did. Sometimes I wish I could have sprung all the way from a baby to a man. It's such slow work growing up; and it was while mother was waiting for us to grow up that she worked so hard.

"But, my dear boy, you cannot expect to be son and daughter and mother all at once. You cannot do the work for a whole family."

"Yes I can; it isn't much, and I'm going to do it and the work my father left undone. I'm going to pay that mortgage, if I live."

"Heaven grant you may," I said fervently under my breath; "for not many mothers have such a son."

"Mother don't know I mean to do it, and she is very anxious I should go to school, and I mean to some time, but I know just where the boys in my class are studying, and I get the lessons at home. Mother reads them to me out of the book, while I am washing the dishes or doing her work, and we have great fun. I try to remember and repeat it, and if we come to anything we can't make out, take I it over to the teacher in the evening, she is very kind—and she tells me."

"Very kind! Who wouldn't be kind to such a boy? How do you expect to save if you spend your time indoors?"

"Oh, I don't do girl's work all day; no indeed! I have worked out our taxes on the roads. It wasn't much, but I helped the men build a stone wall down by the river; and Deacon Ball lets me do a great deal of work for him, and when I get a chance to take anybody from the hotel to ride, he lets me have his team for almost nothing, and I would pay to him whatever I make. And I work on the farm with the men in summer; and I have a cow of my own and sell the milk at the tavern, and we have some hens, too, and sell the eggs. And in the fall I cut and pile the winter's wood in the sheds for the people who haven't any boys, and there's a good many people around here who haven't any boys," he added, brushing a fly from the old horse with the tip of his whip.

After this we fell into silence and rode through the sweet New England roads, with Monadnock rising before us, ever near us and more majestic. It impressed me with a sense of its rugged strength—one of the hills, "rock-ribbed and ancient as the sun; "but I glanced from the mountain to the little red-headed morsel of humanity at my side, with a sort of recognition of their kinship. Somehow they seemed to belong together. I felt as if the same sturdy stuff was in both of them. It was only a fancy, but it was confirmed the next day, for when I came back to town after seeing my invalid friend, I called on Deacon Ball. I found him white haired and kindly faced. He kept the village store and owned a pretty house, and was evidently very well to do. Naturally we talked of Johnny, and the deacon said to me with tears in his old watery blue eyes:

"Why, bless your heart, sir, you don't think I'm going to take his money, do you? The only son of his mother, and she a widow, and tied up into double bow knots with rheumatics, besides! True enough I let his father have the money and my wife she says, says she to me, 'Well, deacon, my dear, we've not got a child and shall be just as well off a hundred years from now if the widow never pays a cent; but 'cording to my calculations it's better to let the boy think he's payin'. She says I might as well try to keep a barrel of vinegar from workin' as to keep that boy from workin'. It's the mother in him and it's got to work. We think a good deal of the widow, Mandy and me. I did before I saw Mandy; but for all that we hold the mortgage, and Johnny wants to work it out. Mandy and me, we are going to let him work."

I turned away, for I was going to sup at Johnny's house; but before I went I asked the deacon how much Johnny had already paid.

"Well I don't know; Mandy knows—I pass it to her, she keeps the books. Drop in before you go to the train and I'll show it to you."

I dropped in and the deacon showed me the account. It was the book of the savings bank of a neighboring town, and on pages were credits of all the little sums the boy had earned or paid; and I saw they were standing in the Widow Beebe's name. I grasped the deacon's hand. He was looking away over the housetops to where Monadnock was smiling under the good night kiss of the sun.

"Goodbye sir, goodbye," he said, returning my squeeze with interest. Much obliged I am sure, Mandy and me, too; but don't you be worried about Johnnie. When we see it we know the real stuff it takes to make a real man—and Johnny has got it; Johnny is like that mountain over there—chock full of grit and lots of backbone.—N. Y. World.

A TRIP DOWN THE COLUMBIA RIVER.

COLUMBIA RIVER, ORE., April 23, 1887.

Mr. Editor:—When a boy attending district No. 6, in Ware, I learned in geography something about the Columbia river, away in the extreme northwest corner of the United States. Since then I have oftentimes read of the wonderful stream, its scenery, and its salmon fisheries. This morning I find myself on this same wonderful river, on the stern-wheel steamer, S. G. Reed, en route from Portland to Astoria. Portland, is a bright and thriving city of 40,000 people, and is 100 miles from the mouth of the Columbia; Astoria, a small city of 5000 people, just at the mouth of the river where it pours its pure waters into the great Pacific. We left Portland this morning at 6 o'clock and are making about 12 miles an hour down the river. The first twelve miles was on the Willamette river down to its junction with the Columbia. The day is perfect, the air is filled with the perfume of the spring wild flowers. The banks of the river seem to have already put on their summer dress. The trees are in full foliage and a beautiful green covers all the open country. The river seems to be fully three-quarters of a mile in width. Forests of fir trees cover the banks most of the way.

A little way down the stream I see a row boat with two men, and the steamer seems to be slowing up as if she would stop in mid-stream for a row boat. Yes, she stops; the men in the row boat throw a line and make fast to the big steamer. They have brought their cargo to put on board. I watch them as they throw on our boat ten beautiful salmon. They are beauties indeed, varying in weight from twenty to fifty pounds. They are caught in gill nets during the night, and sent down to the canneries at Astoria.

Here we touch at St. Helens a small station on the left bank, where the entire people and industry is connected with a small saw mill. To the right, and apparently not more than five miles away (though really twenty-five, I suppose,) stands Mt. St. Helens. It seems to stand as a faithful sentry in this beautiful gateway. All about its base the forest is wearing a perpetual evergreen. But all the way up its steep sides from where the timber ceases it is covered with perpetual snow. It seems to rise from out the small cluster of hills about its base, as a grand and faithful monitor, introduced by the influences which move all nature elsewhere. Within sight and twenty-five miles further inland stands Mt. Hood, the big brother of Mt. St. Helens.

Here again we stop in mid-stream and from a small row boat there is put on board eighteen more splendid specimens of the Columbia's kingly fish. These two fishermen with their boat and nets have toiled all night and caught but these eighteen—but such fish. Now and then we pass a little hamlet cut out of the forest, where the fruit trees are in full bloom, and where the people manufacture lumber, grow fruit and catch salmon.

We now stop at a wood station on the south bank and take on twelve cords of fir wood to feed the hungry engines. This wood has come down the steep bluff, almost perpendicular, in a shoot of several hundred feet. It is very much like our yellow pine, and sells for $2 50 per cord to the passing boats.

As we near the mouth of the river the canning factories increase in number. These consist of a few rude buildings where the salmon, which are caught in the vicinity, are prepared for market. (We have fully a ton on board taken up along the river.) Here we come in sight of Astoria, spread along the bank of the river and up the steep bluffs. It is three miles long and very narrow. The salmon fisheries are the principal industry. During the months of April, May, June and July the fish are caught, not less than 500 men giving their time to fishing, and nearly as many more to the canning. The fishing is done with nets thrown out from row boats. The net is thrown out across a part of the stream, neither end made fast, but allowed to float with the stream, the lead line at the bottom and the wooden floats on top keeping it in a perpendicular position. The meshes are not less than six inches. The fish swimming up the stream strikes the net and attempts to run through it and is caught by the gills in the meshes of the net, and in his efforts to free himself soon attracts the attention of the fishermen who is near by in his boat and on the watch for just this. The fisherman pulls to the place and lifts a forty pound salmon into the boat, replacing the net for the next finny traveler. The fish are caught mostly in the night. At about eight o'clock in the morning the fleet of boats come in with their loads of fish. These are sold to the canneries without regard to size for 90 cents each. At the canneries they are cleaned, dressed, cut up, put in cans, cooked, sealed and boxed for market by Chinamen. Most of the fishing is done by Norwegians. They are expert and hardy, and make very good citizens. I was heartily welcomed at the wharf on arrival, by the general secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association. Soon after I was introduced to the generous hospitality of a Massachusetts man and was given the privilege of sharing in three well attended services on Sunday, and returning to Portland on Monday. W. E. LEWIS.

MR. BEECHER ON DANCING.

People ask me frequently; "Do you think there is any harm in dancing?" "No, I do not. There is much good in it. "Do you then, object to dancing parties?" No; in themselves, I do not. But where unknit youth, unripe muscle, unsettled and unhardened nerves, are put through an excess of excitement, treated with stimulants, fed irregularly and with unwholesome food, surrounded with gayety which is excessive, and which is protracted through hours when they should be asleep, I object, not because of the dancing, but because of the dissipation. It is taking the time that unquestionably was intended for sleep, and spending it in the highest state of exhilaration and excitement. The harm is not in the dancing itself; for if they danced as do the peasants, in the open air, upon the grass under the trees, and in the day, it might be commended not as virtuous, but still as belonging to those negative things that may be beautiful. But the wassail in the night, the wastefulness—I will not say of precious hours, for hours are not half so precious as nerves are—the dissipation, continued night after night, and week after week through the whole season, it is this I deprecate as eating out the very life. I am not superstitious of observances, but I am always thankful that there are forty days of lent in the year, when folks can rest from their debauches and dissipations; when no round of excessive excitement in the pursuit of pleasure is permitted to come in and ruin the health and cripple the natural powers of the young.—Henry Ward Beecher.

HE KNEW HER SISTER.

Mrs. Dollinger, a Sioux Falls lady, who lives on 12th street, heard a rap at the front door the other afternoon, and responded to find a very distinguished looking gentleman, extremely dignified and handsome.

"Ah! Mrs. Dollinger, I believe," he said.

"Yes, sir."

"My name is Harcourt. I live at Huron. Mrs. Scott of that place is your sister, is she not?"

"Yes, sir."

"Ah, yes, I am very well acquainted with her. She requested me to call and do a little errand for her."

"Oh, yes; won't you step in, Mr. Harcourt?"

"Thank you, I believe I will. Very fine weather we're having."

"Yes, sir. Take the easy chair."

"Thank you—pray don't put yourself to any trouble on my account."

"Certainly not. Was my sister well when you left?"

"Quite well, I'm pleased to say. By the way, Mrs. Dollinger, I have a little work here which I would like to show, as I am sure you would be interested in it, it is called 'Daniel in tne Lion's Den," and it is by the Rev. Thomas R. Deuteronomy, and it comes in twelve parts, exquisitely bound in cloth, leather or extra Russia, is finely illustrated and should be in every library and I am taking hundreds of orders, as you can see by examining this order book, and everybody is wild over it and all pronounce it the most wonderful book written since the Holy Scriptures, it treats of Daniel in ten stages, when he started to go into the den, when he got a little further in, when he got clear in, when the lions came up to examine him, while they were making their survey, while they retired to consult together, when they decided a post mortem would be necessary, when they announced the result to Daniel, when he convinced them that he would not consent to an autopsy, when the lions retired and Daniel got out, embellished with numerous cuts, plans, maps and beautiful steel engravings, comes at $1 a part or $12 for the entire work, put your name down here and pay as you receive each part, 11 parts now ready—here is a fountain pen, write under Mr. Brown's name at the bottom of the page."

"Mr. Harcourt," said Mrs. Dollinger, rising and suppressing her tears, "you're a mean, deceitful book agent! Get out of my house!"

"I know, but just sign—"

"Go on, or I shall scream!"

"Certainly, certainly, if you insist, no offense. But can you tell me the name of the lady next door and where some of her family live? Ah, won't eh? I'll work another scheme, them. Good day, Mrs. Dollinger, good day, glad to have made your acquaintance!"—Dakota Bell.

NO FEAR, NO HOPE.

Robert Owen once visited a gentleman who was a believer. In walking out, they came to the gentleman's family grave. Owen, addressing him, said: "There is one advantage I have over Christians—I am not afraid to die. Most Christians are afraid to die; but if some of my business were settled, I should be perfectly willing to die at any moment." "Well," said his companion, you say you have no fear in death; have you any hope in death?" After a solemn pause, he replied, "No!" "Then," replied the gentleman, pointing to an ox standing near, "you are on a level with that brute; he has fed till he is satisfied, and stands in the shade whisking off the flies, and has neither hope nor fear."—Old Testament Anecdotes.

"Oh, give us a rest," said a young man impatiently, to a little boy who was busy plying him with questions. The little fellow looked at him a moment, and then, with the utmost innocence, said: "Well, you rest and I'll talk."—Columbia (S. C.) Record.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 3, 1887.

BOSTON expended nearly $17,000 in entertaining Queen Kapiolani and her party,—rather an expensive How-are-ye.

FLORIDA'S new United State's senator, Mr. Pasco, enjoys the distinction of being the first ex-Confederate private ever elected to that office, though generals abound in the halls of Congress.

ANOTHER census year draws near, but there are four volumes of the census of 1880 yet to be published. A census which cannot be completed in seven years is too elaborate to be of any value.

SIX HUNDRED Chinese bodies have been disinterred in California this week, to be shipped to China for final burial. It would please the Pacific coasters better if the bodies were live ones.

THE Governor has sent a message to the Legislature urging an appropriation of $20,000 for the construction of an isolated building at the Charlestown state prison, in which to confine convicts who are noisy and disorderly.

MAJ. GEORGE S. MERRILL of the Lawrence American has been appointed insurance commissioner in place of the late Mr. Tarbox. Mr. Merrill is a wide awake man with experience in public affairs, and ought to make a good commissioner.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND and Col. Lamont went out on Saranac Lake Tuesday and caught 200 trout. At least, that is the story which is sent out to the world, but scoffers intimate that the president has already acquired the knack of telling as good a fish story as any old angler.

A BUTLER CLUB, with Col. Plympton as president, was formed at Boston yesterday, strictly for "social purposes," it is affirmed. The general made a short speech, and declared that he saw no reason for entering politics again, "unless an emergency arise."

GOV. AMES should be careful how he goes away from home to talk. He was the guest of a New York club last Saturday night and made a speech, saying among other things:—

One of the hardest things I have to perform is to exercise the veto power. Why, if I were to exercise it as freely as the governor of this state does there would be a revolution. I have vetoed just one measure and the opposition it produced was frightful. I felt it my duty to give the lobby a lesson, and I think I succeeded.

THE Legislature has incorporated a new trust company for Springfield, of which Senator Phillips will probably be president. A new gas company has also been incorporated for the same city, with the same president. Our senator appears to be making himself solid against the time when he will retire from the public service.

Two men who will be greatly missed have passed away from earthly scenes the past week,—Insurance Commissioner John K. Tarbox of this state, who died last Saturday, and Maj. Ben: Perley Poore, who breathed his last at an early hour Sunday morning at Washington. The major was one of the oldest and best known correspondents at the capitol. His letters have been a prominent feature of the Boston Journal for many years, and his long acquaintance with public men and affairs, coupled with his genial nature, made him a prince of hosts. Mr. Tarbox was appointed insurance commissioner in 1883 by Gov. Butler, the appointment being one of the best things that Butler did while governor. The commissioner was emphatically the right man in the right place, and none have discharged the responsible duties of the office with greater ability and fidelity than he, the revision of the insurance laws of the state being his last and crowning work. Mr. Tarbox had been in poor health for many years, but his strong will power enabled him to keep about his work with undiminished vigor, where other men would have succumbed. His presence and voice will be missed at the gatherings of the Massachusetts Press Association, of which he was a valued member.

MEMORIAL DAY.

Memorial Day was observed as usual in this village, the banks, schools and mills closing for all day, and the stores in the afternoon. At eight o'clock the Grand Army post, escorted by the Palmer fife and drum corps, marched through Main street, afterward taking carriages to the other villages, where graves of fallen veterans were decorated. After the exercises at the cemetery in this village, the Woman's Relief Corps served a dinner in Grand Army hall to the post and invited guests. At two o'clock in the afternoon a good sized audience assembled at the rink, where Col. S. C. Warriner of Springfield made the address. He said that but few can avoid care and responsibility, and that is the true condition of life, and the labor, perseverance and skill expended in the development of this country shows that the nation has followed the natural condition. But even here in America it has been shown "that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," and the peace which the rising generation has but to enjoy and not to defend, is the result of gigantic struggles. The speaker then spoke of the victories of war and of peace, and of the struggles for wealth and fame. He referred to the victories of the rebellion, and all they meant to this country, but that these victories of peace, which make us true to the government thus saved, are attainable by each one of us. The orator compared the battles of life and the battles of war, drawing many similarities between them. The soldiers who fought in the civil war have the satisfaction of having given valuable service to their country, but they have still to serve their country by being good citizens. But though we have our victories to win, it is fitting that we should honor those who once bore arms and have laid them down forever. The speaker then spoke of the war and its attendant victories and defeats, referring particularly to the Palmer soldiers. He also spoke of the dependent pension measure and encouraged the people of Palmer to erect a memorial to their soldier-dead. He mentioned many interesting events in connection with the war and closed with an appeal to the people to stand by the Grand Army in return for the country whose blessings all enjoy.

The following song written for the occasion by Mrs. S. W. Coleman, was sung by George W. Ely to the air "Tenting To-night," the choir joining in the chorus:

We're meeting to-day with our chaplets to deck
The graves of our heroes who fell,
And a tribute of tender affection to pay,
While their brave deeds of valor we tell;
We're meeting the scenes of those days to recall,
When the war cloud our country o'erspread,
When our fathers and sons were manfully on
To the altar of sacrifice led.

CHORUS.

We're meeting to-day, meeting to day,
With garlands to cover each grave,
And a tribute of tender affection to pay
To our noble, our true-hearted brave.

Tearfully, tenderly, come we to-day,
Though naught can disturb them, or harm,
The call of the drum and bugle no more
Will arouse them with battles' alarm;
Their conflicts are ended, their victories won,
And now on the high battle ground
Their unfading laurels in triumph they'll bear,
And with glory eternally crowned.

The teachers took the opportunity given them Tuesday to visit schools in different parts of the state, some going as far as Boston.

Dr. J. W. Hastings has moved to the Morgan place on Maple street. Lyman Powers will take the house formerly occupied by him.

The literary association met Tuesday evening and discussed the probabilities of a new literary building. The legacy left by the late Mr. Lucius Knowles will be paid as soon as the lawsuits against the estate by Crompton & Co. and the Sibley heirs are settled. The sum is $5000, but so left that it can only be used to furnish reading matter, so it remains for our liberal minded people to furnish the building, which they will no doubt do, as they appreciate the benefits of a good library and reading room.

There was a pleasant gathering at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hitchcock Wednesday evening to witness the marriage of their only daughter Annie, to George Tarbell, Rev. Mr. Clark performing the ceremony. The bride was attired in a dress of white silk, with beaded front. A veil and orange blossoms completed the costume. The house was handsomely decorated with flowers and there were a number of very handsome presents, among them a fine picture presented by the choir of the Congregational church, of which Miss Hitchcock was a member.

The Willing Hearts and Ready Hands will give a strawberry and ice cream festival in the church vestry Saturday evening.

L. H. Brigham, who has been for many years agent of the Ludlow Manufacturing Company, has resigned his position and intends to travel. Mr. John Stevens is his successor.

The Memorial Day exercises were very enjoyable. After the decorating and marching, a large company gathered in the Union church to listen to the oration given by Mr. Chamberlain of New Britain, Conn. The singing was conducted by W. F. Miller, and was very fine. The church had been beautifully trimmed by the church flower committee.

A special town meeting will be held in Joy's hall to-morrow afternoon at three o'clock, at which time, after choosing a moderator, these articles will be acted upon: Second, to see if the town will build a school house in Ludlow village and appropriate money therefor, and to act in any manner relating thereto. Third, to see if the town will instruct the selectmen to purchase or take land in Ludlow village for the location of a school house. Fourth, to see if the town will authorize the treasurer, with the approval of the selectmen, to borrow on the credit of the town such sums of money as shall be needed for the purposes of the foregoing articles, and to give the notes of the town therefor. Fifth, to hear and act on the petition of William Swan and others, which is to see if the town will hear from the school committee and others, the reasons why the school house owned by the Ludlow manufacturing company and recently occupied by the town for school purposes, has ceased to be occupied for such purposes, and take action in the premises. As Freeman W. Dickenson attempted to mount his horse last Saturday a dog frightened the animal, throwing Mr. D. to the ground and breaking his arm.

The house of Mrs. William Howlett was entered last Friday in the absence of the family, and a watch taken from the sitting room. Nothing else was missed, neither have they any clue to the thief.

Homer Pease has bought the "paper mill" property, and it is proving quite a bonanza, as he is disposing of considerable of the machinery that was considered worthless.

Mrs. Ebenezer Howlett, or as she was familiarly called, "Aunt Setta," died Sunday morning from injuries received three weeks before from an unmanageable horse owned by Dr. Herbert Pease of Springfield, which took to the walk, running over her and breaking her leg below the knee. It was seen at once that in her aged and feeble condition she could not recover, although she bore her sufferings patiently and cheerfully, trusting in the Lord. She was converted at the age of seventeen, and from that time until her death at the age of 82 she has been a staunch Methodist, and the children she has taught in the Sunday school would make quite an army, and until failing health compelled it her seat in church was rarely vacant. She was industrious and frugal, qualities which with a long life enabled her to save considerable money, although she has done a great deal for the Methodist society, the welfare of which was very dear to her heart. She has given many dollars for books for the Sunday school, and helped liberally to cancel the church debt, and four years ago she presented the society with a bell for the church, besides giving annually to missionaries and various others, which is to be continued yearly by the terms of her will which was read the day of her burial. After small legacies to her nieces and nephew the remainder, some seven or eight thousand dollars, goes to the Methodist society, together with her best household furniture. Her homestead, at which she has lived alone since her husband's death just six years before, goes to a favorite niece, Mrs. Chamberlin of Providence, who will remove there at once.

Prof. S. C. Chandler, who has been visiting Erastus White this week, attended the Unitarian anniversaries at Boston last week, and contributed $1000 to the building fund of that association. He also expresses a desire to contribute toward the building of a Universalist church in this place.

The Grand Army post feels somewhat disappointed that their services in Memorial Hall Monday should have been so poorly attended, as in years past there has been a large attendance. But when the young men will insist on making the day a holiday and engage in all kinds of sports and amusements, well may the speaker inquire, "Where are the young men of to-day? "The young men and young women of Monson were certainly conspicuous by their absence, Monday.

The ringing of the bells at five and six o'clock in the morning is a thing of the past. The hours will hereafter be struck in the same manner as they are through the night.

The fire department made a fine appearance Memorial Day in their new uniforms. After the services of decoration they were photographed by C. W. Eddy. Any desiring copies may leave the order with the foreman of their company.

Timothy McCarty was arrested Memorial Day for tearing up the flags and flowers on the graves in the cemetery. He says he came from Boston and has a sister in Malden, but has been pronounced insane and will probably be taken to an asylum.

Rev. C. E. Ameron, M. A., B. D., will preach at the East Congregational church next Sunday. Subject: "The French Evangilization in Massachusetts." In the evening he will speak to the French in Grand Army Hall. Subject: "What are Protestants, and why are we Protestants?"

It is reported that there is a possibility of having a union depot after all. At the town meeting Wednesday the matter of the re-location of Knox avenue was put over to an adjourned meeting next week, until it could be ascertained what would be done by the railroad companies, whose officers held a conference Tuesday.

It is with regret we have to report that John W. Robinson has retired from active business, where he has been for about fifteen years, having sold his extensive furniture and hardware business to his son, John F. Robinson. In his retirement we lose from the street one of our best business men, but we are pleased to note that the son, who is an active, go-ahead young man, is to succeed him. He will take possession as soon as account of stock can be taken.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, June 1st, 1887.

Like so many other matters, the order in regard to increasing the governor's salary has been reported with the recommendation, "reference to the next general court." Senator Glines of Middlesex moves to substitute a bill to make the salary $10,000 a year after Jan. 1st next.

Thursday afternoon there occurred in the House an animated debate on the question of exempting city laborers from the civil service examinations. The movement began in Boston, and all its support on the floor of the House came from Boston. Pitiful pleas were made for the laborer who has to get a certificate of good moral character before he can get a job, and who must endure a policeman "sneaking and smelling around" to see whether he drinks or not. The veteran of the war was also brought in to help along the passage of the bill, but the House was largely against it. A good speech was made by Mr. Quincy of Quincy, who is one of the rising and promising young men of the Legislature. He is different from most of his fellow Democrats.

The judiciary committee has reported a bill to allow the removal of boiler-iron doors, bars, and like obstructions to the entrance of policemen to gambling places. The bill is the result of a recent Boston murder in a gambling den.

The Cheshire railroad bill, which has been reported from the railroad committee and promises to pass both branches, allows that road to consolidate with the Fitchburg railroad upon such terms as may be agreed upon by a majority of the directors of both roads.

Friday's session of the House was devoted almost entirely to the liquor bills, each of which is a severe restriction upon the liquor trade, and each of which was passed to be engrossed. Both of them have yet to make the passage of the Senate. One of them provides that when any liquor seller is convicted of violating the liquor law, his license shall thereby be forfeited. This was opposed as hard on the offender, who is supposed to be fined an amount sufficient to punish him for the offense, but Mr. Darling of the liquor committee said they wanted to annihilate the liquor business as much as possible. Mr. Wharton of Boston tried to soften down the bill so that the license should be forfeited only for violation of its terms, but the House supported the strict bill.

The other bill was that to make signs, labels or a United States' internal revenue receipt prima facie evidence of sales of liquor. This was stoutly opposed, but after excepting drug stores and taking out malt liquor from that included under the revenue receipt, the House engrossed the bill with almost no opposition.

The Legislature faithfully observed Memorial Day, and the State House was as still as in the midst of the summer vacation.

Most of Tuesday and Wednesday was devoted by the Senate to the West End bill, and by the House to the resolve in favor of Walter Shanly. The former measure was engrossed after it had been materially amended. It was changed so that the total capital stock shall be only $6,400,000 (the present capital of the several horse car companies of Boston) instead of $12,500,000, as proposed in the bill. This was a concession of the managers to the criticisms of the press and of the public. On Wednesday the bill was further changed so that the car fares in Boston shall not increase and the preferred stock shall not be more than the capital of the roads as they stand to-day.

The Shanly resolve had come from the finance committee with the recommendation that it ought not to pass, two of the members, Walker of Worcester and McEttrick of Boston, dissenting. After the close of the debate on Wednesday afternoon the vote was 63 yeas to 109 nays on the rejection of the resolve. During the debate Mr. Walker presented a memorandum signed by Walter Shanly and ex-Gov. Gaston and George A. Flagg (his counsel), that if the resolve should pass it should be a full settlement for all "legal, moral and equitable" claims of Shanly against the state. No action was taken on it, and the sentiment of the House was before that apparently in favor of Shanly. Most of the arguments were old, of course. The new statement was made that the state has saved $225,000 in brick arching in consequence of Shanly's taking out more rock than his contract called for. A surprising position was that of Mr. Gamwell of Pittsfield in favor of the resolve, and his making one of the best speeches for it. Pittsfield has hitherto been strong against it.

Wednesday afternoon the Senate engrossed the bill to incorporate the new town of North Attleboro. No contest occurred over the bill, for its friends and opponents had agreed to a compromise that its validity should be questioned upon a majority vote of the town,—the divisionists to have a chance a second time, if they failed the first. An amendment has been adopted putting the expense of the survey equally on the old and new towns.

At the meeting of the governor and council Wednesday afternoon, Major Geo. S. Merrill of Lawrence (formerly secretary of the Republican state committee and editor of the Lawrence American) was nominated insurance commissioner in the place of the late Commissioner Tarbox, who died last Saturday, and the nomination was at once confirmed under a suspension of the rules.

A bill was reported from the public health committee Wednesday to prevent the adulteration of lard. It provides that nothing but pure swine fat shall be sold as lard. For the first offense the penalty is $50, and for each subsequent offense it is $100.

On Wednesday the Senate engrossed without debate the prohibitory constitutional amendment. Only Republicans voted yes, and only three Republicans voted no. Here is the vote:

YEAS: Clark, Forbes, Gleason of Plymouth, Gleason of Worcester, Glines, Gould, Hartwell, Jeffs, Keith of Plymouth, Marble, Morse, Pillsbury, Reed, Turner, Wilbur.—15.

NAYS: Alger, Fernald, Howard, Jones of Berkshire, Jones of Essex, Milliken, Phillips, Roads, Sayles, Welch.—10.

PAIRS: Cook, Fletcher, Kimball, Keith of the Cape, yea, with Currier, Perkins, Newell, Dwyer, Jordan, nay. LANDON.

June Magazines.

The Century for June has for a frontispiece a portrait of the Russian novelist, Count Leo Tolstoi, accompanied by a paper "A Visit to Count Tolstoi," which commences a series of articles to appear later in the Century recording a hazardous trip to Siberia in 1885 and 1886 by the author, Mr. Kennan. The Lincoln History makes marked progress toward the presidential contest of 1860. The special topics in the present part are the attack on Charles Sumner by Preston S. Brooks, and the Dred Scott decision of March 6th, 1857. The battle series make a comprehensive advance with a paper by General E. M. Law on the Virginia campaign of 1864, entitled "From the Wilderness to Cold Harbor." The Century also makes public for the first time a complete resume of the aggregate forces and losses of the Union Army in the Wilderness campaign. The out-door lovers will appreciate the two papers "College Boat Racing" and "Boat Racing by Amateurs," while the thoughtful will like "Education and Social Progress." Mr. Stockton's "The Hundredth Man," is continued and the usual prose and poetry is fully equalled in quantity and quantity.

The Wide Awake, ever popular with the young and old, begins its twenty-fifth volume with its bright and spicy June number. There is prose and poetry, truth and fiction, grave and gay—matter to suit all tastes. The number is particularly well illustrated.

The June number of Harper's Magazine opens with an article on "The Excavations at Susa," by Madame Jane Dieulafoy. This is the first authentic account published of the remarkable discoveries at the sight of the Darius' Capital, in Persia, by the archæological mission sent by the French government under M. Marcel Dieulafoy, 1881-1886. An entertaining article on "The Kentucky Pioneers" by one of their direct descendent, John Mason Brown, will be of prominent interest. The interest of the subject clusters around the picturesque little city of Frankfort, the favorite resort of Daniel Boone. "Stephen Wycherlie" is a strong story of Puritan England, while "The Route of the Wild Irishman," will be found very interesting as describing the route of the "Wild Irishman," which carries the American mails from London through North Wales to Holyhead. There is an article on "Cage Birds" by a Dublin naturalist, the third installment of "Mexican States," another portion of "April Hopes" and "Narka," a seasonable article on "American Railroad Legislation," and other good things too numerous to mention.

People visiting Springfield will find the Half-dime Lunch Rooms, 251 and 253 Main street, the place to get their meals. The location is but a short distance from the depot, the service is good and the prices are the lowest in the city. The variety is large and 5 cents each is charged for all dishes served. 3w10

For the relief and cure of the inflammation and congestion called "a cold in the head" there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other modes of treatment have proved of no avail.

$4500 edition of King's Hand Book of Springfield, with 152 illustrations, historical and descriptive. A $2 book of history to you and an advertisement to Gill's Art Store, at 50 cents each, or by mail for 21 cents extra. Bargains in stationery. Books and Pictures in desirable goods at Gill's.

Patrons who have visited Haynes & Co's. in the past few weeks are literally astonished at the wonderful bargains shown on fine suits, choice for $8. These suits actually cost the manufacturers $12, $14, $15 and $16 per suit. Being the lucky parties to find them we purchased them for cash, and now offer them at one-half their actual value. Our house is filled with choice styles of fine clothing for men and boys, and it is for your interest to call on Haynes & Co. There is no Clothing House in the states of Massachusetts or Connecticut which can offer the inducements which we do to-day. This sale will continue on the fine suits for $8 about two weeks longer from date. Eight hundred suits, twenty styles to select from. Now remember it's money in your pocket to see them! Haynes & Co., the Popular Clothiers, Springfield, Mass.

CARD OF THANKS.—The comrades of J. W. Lawton Post 85, G. A. R., desire to express their grateful recognition of the services rendered the post by all those who in any way assisted them in their recent entertainment, "Newbern and the Old Flag.

Perhaps no local disease has puzzled and baffled the medical profession more than nasal catarrh. While not immediately fatal it is among the most distressing, nauseous and disgusting ills the flesh is heir to, and the records show very few or no cases of radical cure of chronic catarrh by any of the multitude of modes of treatment until the introduction of Ely's Cream Balm a few years ago. The success of this preparation has been most gratifying and surprising. 2w9

OUR WEALTHY MEN.

Much has been said in newspapers of men who have made large fortunes in comparatively a few years in various business interests. Many of these articles are written by correspondents of prominent newspapers, and copied into others of lesser note. Correspondents generally are seldom men of business qualifications, and wrongfully picture these men and their business as a thing of accident: this is not the case with those we have met. We find that where men have made large fortunes by their own business talent and industry they chose with sagacity and forethought such businesses as would lead to success when handled with business judgment. No man has been brought before the public as an example of success, both in wealth and magnitude of his business (outside of stock and railroad men) more prominently than Dr. G. G. Green of Woodbury, N. J. He is at the head of many large business industries, and yet comparatively a young man. When the fact that August Flower, for dyspepsia and liver complaint and Boschee's German Syrup, for coughs and lung troubles, has grown to a wonderful sale in all parts of the world, it proves that it was not an accident or spontaneous stroke at wealth. His medicines are recognized as valuable and established remedies and the business has grown gradually and permanently during the last eighteen years on account not alone of Dr. Green's abilities as a business man or his "good luck," but on the actual merits of the two preparations.—Copied from the N. Y. Weekly Sun, of Dec. 22, 1886.

A Certainty.

Steele's Little Bile Pills are without an equal for stimulating the liver to healthy action, and creating a proper secretion of bile, thus removing from the system the germs of malaria, curing constipation, indigestion, and inducing a healthy circulation of the blood, without which no one can enjoy sound health. They are small, but effective; free from nauseating propensities and griping pains, and do not interfere in their action with the ordinary routine of daily life. Heavily sugar coated. To be had of LeGro & Lynde, for 25 cents per bottle. 1y8ow

ASTONISHING SUCCESS.

It is the duty of every person who has used Boschee's German Syrup to let its wonderful qualities be known to their friends in curing consumption, severe coughs, croup, asthma, pneumonia, and in fact all throat and lung diseases. No person can use it without immediate relief. Three doses will relieve any case, and we consider it the duty of all druggists to recommend it to the poor, dying consumptive, at least to try one bottle, as 80,000 dozen bottles were sold last year, and no one case where it failed was reported. Such a medicine as the German Syrup cannot be too widely known. Ask you druggist about it. Sample bottles to try, sold at 10 cents. Regular size, 75 cents. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in the United States and Canada. 47eow

SPRINGFIELD NEWS AND GOSSIP.

D. H. BRIGHAM & CO.

Make their bow, and crave the privilege of a few remarks. Their claim of being the oldest and most extensive Clothiers, Hatters, Furriers, Furnishers and Outfitters in Western New England was settled years ago, beyond dispute. Their trade, by mail or otherwise, extends to nearly every state in the Union. They keep pace with the times, and so anticipate their patrons' wants that they can always supply them with fashionable and reliable outfits, minus "Extravagant Tailors' Bills." It is their study to constantly offer something new and stylish, and still keep their prices within reach of the masses.

"Man Wants but Little here Below,"

But he is very particular about that little. Scarcely an old garment can be found in Brigham & Co's Men's Department, which contains the largest and best range of New Fancy Suits, and full lines of Genuine Scotch Goods, in Frock, Sack and Double-breasted Sack Suits. Full-dress suits have a place there, and so do the "Prince Albert" Double-breasted Frock Coats, in slender sizes, and large enough to fit a fifty-inch breast measurement.

WHO SAYS THEY HAVE NOTHIMG TO DO WITH THE CASE,

Those fine Spring Overcoats, which are constantly in stock? Blue and Grand Army Suits are a specialty. The firm control the "McMillan" pantaloon agency for Western Massachusetts, and their customers make their selection from thousands of single pantaloons (not in suits).

When Charles Dudley Warner Wrote "Being a Boy"

He little thought the time would come so soon when boys can be elegantly clothed at a nominal price. Brigham & Co. have not only the staple patterns, but also the rare styles in boys' furnishings, such as short-pant suits up to 16 years, and Bicycle pants up to 34-inch waist, three-piece dress suits in short pants, genuine Scotch (English roll) short-pant suits up to 16 years. Kilt overcoats

DELIGHT A MOTHER'S HEART

And fill the measure of a small boys' pride, as do Kilt suits, with Blouse, Norfolk and Vest-front waists, in new material and superior workmanship. A new and elegant stock of Spring and Summer hats is shown for Men, Boys and Children. Bought by the case and direct from the manufactures, one profit is saved the customer in every instance.

YOUR BEST GIRL

Knows that for genuine comfort there is nothing like the real Mexican Hammock, and it is your duty to introduce her to the "Bay State Perfection Hammock," which Brigham & Co. sell for a little above the cost of worthless imitations, an investment of a sum ranging from 75 cents to $5, including ropes and stretchers.

BRIM FULL

Of choice novelties from the Old World is their Furnishing Goods Department for men's and boys' wear. They display the most celebrated American lines of shirts, collars, cuffs, neckwear, gloves, underwear, half-hose, dressing robes and smoking-jackets. They pride themselves on fine silks, alpaca and gingham umbrellas, not to mention as desirable rubber and waterproof clothing as can be found in any Furnishing Goods Establishment.

SPRINGFIELD NEEDS A NEW DEPOT,

Because there is not a train leaving the old one that does not carry a representation of Brigham & Co's. immense stock of trunks and traveling bags, their solid, sole-leather trunks and alligator bags for men and women.

ALL SUMMER LONG

their cloak room is kept open to supply the popular demand for a higher grade of Top Garments for women and children, fine imported wraps, jackets, shawlettes and Fischus, Paris Models, the display being richer than ever before. They are pleased to show the best American manufactures, with misses' and children's sizes, and they have contracted for an entire stock of white suits, (manufacturers' samples) including children's sizes, which will be sold at half-price.

The Decks Will be Cleared

this season, just as they always are, nothing being carried over. And the clearing process has already begun; goods that do not sell quickly will be reduced in price, even being marked down to less than half their value, for the sake of securing fast sales and making room for fresh installments. Business can be done by mail just as well as otherwise, all goods being warranted as represented, or the money refunded. During this special sale the terms are invariably, cash on delivery.

SOLUBLE PACIFIC GUANO.

FOR SALE BY AGENTS IN EVERY TOWN.

Since 1865 this Fertilizer has proved like Farm-yard manure, good for any crop, on any soil, in any climate.

Try it alongside of brands which advertise attractive "valuations," and see if the latter even equal it in their effect on the soil. Any farmer may learn to his own satisfaction the doubtful value of "commercial valuations," as against the agricultural value of a good Fertilizer.

Smile Whenever You Can.

When things don't go to suit you
And the world seems upside down,
Don't waste your time in fretting,
But drive away that frown;
Since life is oft perplexing,
'Tis much the wisest plan,
To bear all trials bravely
And smile when'er you can.

Why should you dread the morrow,
And thus despoil to-day?
For when you borrow trouble
You always have to pay.
It is a good old maxim,
Which should be often preached—
Don't cross the bridge before you
Until the bridge is reached.

You might be spared much sighing
If you would keep in mind
The thought that good and evil
Are always well combined.
There must be something wanting,
And though you roll in wealth
You may miss from your casket
That precious jewel—health.

And though you're strong and sturdy
You may have an empty purse,
(And earth has many trials
Which I consider worse);
But whether joy or sorrow
Fill up your mortal span,
'Twill make your pathway brighter,
To smile whene'er you can.

A SOLOMON IN THE BUD.

Mark Twain's article in the Century is very good reading—almost as good, in fact, as the subjoined examination paper received at Life office this morning:

1. Why does a telegram sent from New York at noon reach St. Louis before noon?

Because it never takes the Western Union Telegraph company more than twenty-three hours to cover the distance.

II. What is the greatest distance in time that two places may have?

There is about a century's difference between New York and Philadelphia.

III. What causes the continual fogs on the Newfoundland coast?

The Newfoundland coast is English, you know.

IV. Where is the Levant?

Down East.

V. State briefly the causes that led to the American civil war.

Niggers.

VI. Name the principal point of difference between the governments of Russia and the United States.

In the United States the government endeavors to elevate the people and in Russia the people endeavor to elevate the government. They sometimes succeed in Russia.

VII. The state of Michigan is divided into two parts by what water?

Fire-water. The Prohibitionists are slightly in the rear.

VIII. If the first day of March were on Friday, what day would the 17th of March be.

St. Patrick's Day.

IX. Wherein lies the difference between the Senate and the House of Representatives?

The Senate is Republican and the House isn't.

X. Name the five races of mankind?

Horse races, yacht races, foot races, boat races and the race for office.

The unfortunate part of this is that the youth who has displayed such rich and varied stores of learning as above was summarily flunked at the theological seminary to which he applied for admission, and has now has gone on a Western paper in the capacity of humorist.—Life.

A MOST ASTOUNDING BATHING ATTIRE.

Perhaps the most astonishing bathing attire—it cannot be called dress, ever displayed on Long Branch beach was exhibited near Seabright a short time ago. The person who wore it was an actress, but not an American actress. She was a foreigner, and had probably obtained her ideas of American customs from the Saturday Review. She thought that she was doing as the Romans did when she put on that bathing dress. It consisted, as nearly as it can be described in permissible language, of a man's rowing suit made of fine blue silk. The lady rejoices in a figure that closely resembles that of the Venus of the lamented Mr. Milo, only there is a little more of it. Consider the effect of that in blue silk jersey and tights reaching to the knee—wet. It is not necessary to give the name of this person. She played one brief and sorrowful engagement, after which she sank into oblivion and her statuesque bathing suit. It ought to be stated right here in order to prevent a stampede of dudes to the seaside, that young ladies who rejoice in positions of any altitude in the social life of this country do not wear this kind of bathing suit. They draw the line somewhere. But they manage to display a good deal of taste and ingenuity in their costumes, likewise a great deal of girl. The general tendency of the times in regard to bathing dresses may be perceived from the fact that corsets and jerseys are almost universally worn. frequently the jerseys are worn under a blouse of a different color, which has the neck cut low and no sleeves in order to show the jersey. Sleeveless dresses are the rule. The majority of the young ladies are endeavoring to learn to swim, or are making believe that they endeavor. In order to do this they have discarded sleeves, which impede the motion of the arms. New York Times.

The manner of giving shows the charac ter of the giver more than the gift itself. Lavater.

The realization of God's presence is the one sovereign remedy against temptation. —Fenelon.

How much better is the love that is ready to die than the zeal that is ready to kill.—Thomas T. Lynch.

A sound discretion is not so much indi cated by never making a mistake as by never repeating it.—Bovee.

Young Wife—"I took great pains with that cucumber salad, John, and I hope you enjoyed it." Husband (anxiously)—"I'm afraid, my dear, that I took great pains with it, too."—New York Sun.

We have had a profound admiration for snakes ever since we learned that a serpant got the best of the first woman.—Lowell Citizen.

For weak lungs, spitting of blood, shortness of breath, consumption, night sweats and all lingering coughs, Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is a sovereign remedy. Superior to cod liver oil. By druggists.

A Good Appetite

Is essential to good health; and at this season it is often lost, owing to the poverty or impurity of the blood, and the weakening effect of the changing season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful medicine for creating an appetite, toning the digestion, and giving strength to the whole system.

"When I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I was dizzy in the morning, had a headache, and no appetite; but now I can hardly get enough cooked to eat." EMMA SHEPARD, 1 Coral street, Worcester, Mass.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for dyspepsia, which I have had for the last nine or ten years, suffering terribly. It has now entirely cured me." Mrs. A. NORTON, Chicopee, Mass.

"I must say Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I ever used. Last spring I had no appetite, and the least work I did fatigued me ever so much. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon fel as if I could do as much in a day as I had formerly done in a week. My appetite is voracious." MRS. M. V. BAYARD, Atlantic City, N. J.

No Accidental Discovery

—)OR(—

Or Old Woman's Remedy.

Dr. R. C. Flower's Liver and Stomach Sanative is no accidental discovery, no old grandmother's remedy, but is the culmination of the ripest scholarship, the crowning work of years of profound study, and an experience extending over the largest private practice ever enjoyed by an American physician. This medicine has radically cured many thousands of cases where hope had almost vanished, and life was a continued torment before it was placed on the market. Every one can now be cured of dyspepsia, liver complaints, and general debility at a nominal cost. For sale by all druggists. Only $1.00 a bottle.

The Last Mile-Stones.

Sixty years through shine and shadow—
Sixty years, my gentle wife,
You and I have walked together
Down the rugged road of life,
From the hills of spring we started,
And through all the summer land,
And the fruitful autumn country,
We have journeyed hand in hand.

We have borne the heat and burden
Toiling painfully and slow;
We have gathered in our harvest,
With rejoicing, long ago.
Leave the uplands for our children—
They are strong to sow an reap;
Through the quiet winter lowlands
Now our level way we keep.

We have had our time of gladness;
'Twas a proud and happy day—
Ah! the proudest of our journey—
When we felt that we could say
Of the children God had given,
Looking fondly on the ten:
"Lovely women are our daughters—
And our sons are noble men!"

We have had our time of sorrow—
Our time of anxious fears;
When we could not see the mile-stones
Through the blindness of our tears.
In the sunny summer country,
Far behind us little May
And Willie, too, grew weary,
And we left them on the way.

Are you looking backward, mother,
That you stumble in the snow?
I am still your guide and staff, dear,
Lean your weight upon me, so;
Our road is growing narrow;
And, what is it, wife, you say?
Yes! I know our eyes are dim, dear,
But we have not lost the way.

Cheer thee! cheer thee! faithful hearted!
Just a little way before
Lies the great Eternal City
Of the King that we adore.
I can see the shining spires,
And the King, the King, my dear,
We have served him long and humbly;
He will bless us, do not fear.

Ah! the snow falls fast and heavy,
How you shiver with the cold,
Let me wrap your mantle closer,
And my arm around you fold.
We are weak, and faint, and weary,
And the sun low in the west,
We have reached the gates, my darling.
Let us tarry here and rest.

UNCLE NAHUM'S WEDDING.

Uncle Nahum Nixon was reading the paper in his back parlor. Nobody would think, to look at the simple surroundings of the unpretentious apartment, that Mr. Nahum Nixon was one of the wealthiest men in town. The carpet it is true, was Axminister, but it had seen twenty-two good years of service, and was down to the very warp: the faded red curtains were of moreen instead of silk damask; the old clock on the mantle was no Parisian affair of alabaster and gilt, but a substantial Connecticut timepiece that struck with a whirr, like a partridge springing out of her nest; the chairs of old-fashioned mahogany and hair-cloth stood upright against the wall; the portraits of Gen. Washington on horseback and the surrender of Cornwallis ornamented the gay papered walls in frames of sombre gilt, and the one elegence of the apartment was a preposterous bouquet of wax flowers under a cracked glass shade.

But Uncle Nixon had remembered that furniture ever since he was a child, and he wouldn't have exchanged if for the fittings of a Parisian boudoir, or the choicest specimens of the modern Eastlake pattern. He was a rich man—that was quite enough for him.

"If you please, Mr. Nixon," said the trim maid-servant, "Mr. Marmaduke Bourne wants to see you—if you please, sir, if you are quite at leisure."

"Mr. Marmaduke Bourne, eh?" The old gentlemen took off his spectacles and laid them upon the folded newspaper. "Ask him to come in, Polly."

And Mr. Marmaduke Bourne came in—a tall, fresh colored young fellow with sparkling gray eyes, and a straight Greek nose that seemed as if it had been borrowed from some ancient statue of Apollo.

"Well, sir?" said Mr. Nixon.

"Well, sir?" counter-interrogated Mr. Bourne. "Did you get my letter?"

"I got your letter," said Uncle Nahum. "So you want to marry my niece, Faith?"

"Yes, sir," valiantly acknowledged Mr. Marmaduke Bourne.

"Ah!" nodded Uncle Nahum. "But perhaps you don't understand all the facts of the case."

"The facts, sir?"

"I want my niece to marry Col. Ashland's son," slowly enunciated Uncle Nahum.

"But sir, she don't love him."

"Pshaw!" snarled Uncle Nahum. "And if she don't marry him she will be a beggar—I will give her no money of mine. Now you understand matters. Marry her or not, as you please."

He took up the newspaper once more—a tacit intimation that the interview was at an end.

"Sir,—" began Marmaduke.

"That will do," said Mr. Nixon.

"I only wish to—"

"That will do," thundered Mr. Nixon, and so Marmaduke went away.

Little Faith Nixon came down stairs presently—a blue-eyed blossom of a girl, with yellow hair growing low down on her forehead, and a very little mouth, exactly the shape to suggest the idea of kissing.

Uncle Nahum looked keenly up at her as she fluttered about the room, straightening a table cover there or patting down a fold here.

"Yes," said he, with a curious twitch of the muscles around his eyes, "he has been here."

"I—I did not ask any question, Uncle Nahum."

"No, but your eyes did," chuckled the old man. "He wants to marry you—the improvident young donkey."

Faith came to uncle's chair and laid her hand on his shoulder.

"That is not the worst of it, Uncle Nahum—I want to marry him."

"Humph!" snarled Mr. Nixon, in high contempt. "And what do you expect to live on, I should like to know?"

"We can both work," said Faith, bravely.

"You're more likely to starve," said Mr. Nixon. "Mind—don't count on help from me. If you will get married, you do it at you own risk."

"Then you consent, Uncle Nahum?"

"No!" roared the old bachelor, "Nothing of the sort."

"But Uncle Nahum, I should be wretched without Duke!" softly pleaded Faith.

"Fiddlestrings!" said the old man.

"And I'm sure he couldn't live without me."

"Trash!" grunted Mr. Nixon.

"And if you please uncle," added Faith, "perhaps I'd better go to my friend Violet Smith's to make up my wedding things, since you disapprove so decidedly of my plans. She lives in New York, you know, and it will be convenient for shopping, and—"

"And for all other tomfooleries in general," rudely interrupted the old gentleman. "Yes, go to your Violet Smith's, but don't expect to come back here."

"No, uncle," said Faith, meekly. "But you'll let me thank you for all your kindness, and—"

"No, I won't!" said Uncle Nahum, so shortly that poor Faith fled up stairs in dismay and had a quiet little cry, notwithstanding that she was so very, very happy.

For Uncle Nahum, brusque and crabbed though he was, was all the father she had ever known. But she packed her trunk and went to Violet Smith's in New York, which was all the pleasanter, in that Marmaduke Bourne had also betaken himself to this modern Gotham and gone to work studying law as if he meant to take Coke and Blackstone by storm. And Miss Violet Smith, who was a sentimental young lady, sympathized intensely, and the young couple were as unreasonably happy as many another couple has been before and will again.

But one day Duke Bourne came in with a face full of tidings.

"Faith," said he, "have you heard the news?"

"What news?" asked Faith.

"Your uncle will get the start of us, after all."

"What do you mean, Duke?"

"Why, he's going to be married."

"Uncle Nahum?" cried Faith, incredulously.

"Yes, Uncle Nahum. That accounts for his being so willing to get rid of us—eh, little one?"

"And who is the bride?" questioned Faith.

"Why, that's the mooted point yet. Nobody seems to know. Some say one, and some say another; but the general impression seems to be that it is the rich widow who owns the brown stone block on the corner."

"I'm sure I hope he will be happy," said Faith, with tremulous lips and eyes suffused with tears. But—but I think he might have said something to us about it."

"People are not generally in a hurry to proclaim the fact that they are about to make fools of themselves," said Duke Bourne bitterly.

"Why," cried Faith, laughing through her tears, that is precisely what he said of us."

But the next day a letter from Uncle Nahum himself settled the matter. He wrote:

"There is to be a wedding at my house on the seventeenth and I want you and Marmaduke to be there without fail."

"A wedding! At his house!" cried Faith. "I supposed weddings were celebrated at the bride's residence."

"So they are, dear," said Miss Smith; "but your uncle was always so eccentric."

"What shall we do?" asked Faith.

"Why, go, of course," said Marmaduke Bourne, "to show that we bear no ill-will if for no other reason."

The seventeenth of March arrived, a cold, blustering night, and the old red brick house was all in a glimmer of light as the young betrothed pair drew up to the door. Uncle Nahum met them on the threshold, in his old-fashioned swallow-tailed coat, with a huge white camelia in his button-hole and a pair of surprisingly white kid gloves.

"Have you brought your white frock?" was his first question to his niece.

"No, uncle, I—"

"That won't do," said Uncle Nahum. "No one must come to my wedding without a marriage garment. It's lucky I provided one for you. Come up-stairs quick, and put it on, for the parson is waiting and the company are here."

"But uncle, the bride?"

"You shall see her by and by," said Uncle Nahum, despotically. "Come up-stairs now and change your dress."

"But, uncle, a white silk!" cried Faith, looking in dismay at the glistening dress laid out for her use.

"What then? Isn't white silk the thing for a wedding? Put it on quick, and I'll send some one up to bring you down in five minutes."

And so, with a doubting heart, Faith Nixon robed herself in the with dress, with its trimmings of vapory blonde and long trail.

"Where's your veil?" said Uncle Nahum, when he came himself, a few minutes later, to the door.

"Uncle, I can't wear a veil," pleaded Faith.

"But you must!" said Uncle Nahum, "nobody comes to my wedding without a veil." And he placed the wreath lightly on her head.

"But, Uncle Nahum, they will take me for the bride."

"Let 'em," said the old gentleman. "Take my arm. Now come down stairs, and I'll show you the bride. Here she is."

Lifting her bewildered eyes, Faith Nixon beheld her own figure reflected in a full length mirror at the stairway.

"Here's the bride," chuckled Uncle Nahum, leading her up to Bourne, "and here's the groom," touching Bourne's shoulder. "And here's the parson, all ready and waiting. Now, reverend sir," to the clergyman, "marry 'em as fast as ever you can." And, before either of the astonished young couple could remonstrate, they were made man and wife.

"Duke," said the bride, as soon as the ceremony was over, "did you know of this?"

"No, I didn't," said Mr. Bourne, with his arm very tight around his little wife's waist. "But I must say I approve very highly of the whole proceeding."

Uncle Nahum stood by, rubbing his hands, with his whole face wreathed in one prodigious smile.

"So you supposed it was I who was to be married, eh?" said he. "Not a bit of it—not a bit of it. I am too old a bird to be caught with such chaff as that. No, no, little Faith. Did you think I was going to turn my wee-birdie out of her nest, after all the years she has been cherished there? No, no, I only wanted to assure myself that your fancy was a real fancy, and this young rascal, here," smiting Bourne on the shoulder once more, "loved you for yourself alone and not for the money which he thought the old man was going to leave you. And you're to live here, both of you, and we will be happy ever after. Strike up your harps and fiddles. Let's have a dance—let's all be merry together."

Uncle Nahum Nixon himself led off the bridal quadrille, dancing in the good old style of fifty years ago.

"I can't have a wedding every day," said Uncle Nahum, breathlessly, as he cut a last pigeon wing, "and I mean to make the most of it."

THE CHEWINK'S STRATEGY.

What an amusing, artful fellow the chewink is! for I am persuaded that there is more significance in that foxy-red breast of his than is generally accredited. Once after having amused myself, as I supposed at his expense for a full half-hour, I suddenly discovered that I, and not he, had been playing the fool. While watching with much self-credit his queer antics as he hovered about my concealment, I chanced to observe his mate alight for a moment on a distant branch, just long enough for me to note the caterpillar in her bill and tell me that her brood nestled somewhere near at hand. Taking the angle of her flight as a guide, I arose from my covert to seek the nest. and then began the ejaculatory jargon from bush and thicket, "Don't ye wink! don't ye wink!" said this alert picket-guard, in the plainest Anglo-Saxon, as I prowled around among the undergrowths, only soon to discover the female bird on a branch above me. After several moments' vain search, I loitered back to my original retreat, and here my robin entertained me with all sorts of antics among the underbrush and dried leaves, seeming to favor especially a spot beneath a clump of maiden-hair ferns to my left. In fact, nearly all of his maneuvers were confined to this particular side, and with artful purpose, as I afterward discovered to my chagrin; for on arising suddenly to leave the wood, the female bird started up not 10 feet to the right of where I stood, and a moment's search revealed the nest embedded in the leaves at the foot of a tree and containing four callow young.

Seated at a new point of view, whence I could easily perceive the nest, I waited to observe the mother-bird return. But I waited long and vainly. She was nowhere to be seen, though her knowing spouse still pursued his former arts close by. Only once he called out so plainly, "Don't ye wink!" that I instinctively turned toward the nest. But the mother-bird failed to appear, and as I arose once more to depart, and approached her brood, what was my astonishment to observe her deliberately get off the nest before my eyes, run a few feet, and fly up among the trees! Thus twice she seemed to spirit herself upon her nest, and elude me even while I looked, while my confederate in the hocus-pocus kept up his continual diverting pleasantry. At length I thought of an aid to my investigations, and approaching the nest, I tucked within the meshes of its further side a small piece of white paper—a focusing point—somewhat after the manner of the night hunter of the deer, who during daylight sights his stationary rifle upon a piece of phosphorescent wood adjusted above the baited salt-lick, and waits in the darkness to observe his "fox-fire obscured ere he pulls the trigger. Imagine my surprise, however, to observe this white spot disappear, apparently without any intervention, even while I looked upon it; and of my still further surprise to discover, on a nearer approach, the quiet, soft-eyed bird demurely sitting in front of it, and revealing it again as she took wing.

"She winked! she winked!" cried a hovering voice from right and left, apparently accepting no other theory of discovery. Thus, then, was the riddle of her presence solved. She had kept the tree between us in her approach, and apparently waited an opportune moment when my eyes were directed to her arch-confederate to steal around the base of the trunk and glide upon her nest—an act which I soon observed—and when once nestled she so assimilated herself to her surroundings that I doubt if the dried leaves themselves knew of a foreign presence among them. Yes, the ground-robin comes honestly by his motley.

THE BUOYANT POWER OF WATER.

According to an exchange, the human body weighs a pound in the water, and a chair will carry two grown persons—that is it will keep the head above the water, which is all that is necessary when it is a question of life and death. One finger placed upon a stool or a chair, or a box, or a piece of board, will keep the head above the water, while the feet and the other hand may be used to propel toward the shore. It is not necessary to know how to swin to be able to keep from drowning in this way. A little experience of the buoyant power of water, and faith in it, is all that is required. We have seen a small boy, who could not swim a stroke, propel himself back and forth across a deep, wide pond on a board that would not sustain five pounds' weight. Children should have practice in the sustaining power of water. In nine cases out of ten the knowledge that what will sustain a pound weight is all that is necessary to keep one's head above the water, will serve better in emergencies than the greatest expertness in swimming.

A person unacquainted with the buoyant power of water will naturally try to climb on top of the floating object on which he tries to save himself. If it is large enough that is all right. But it is generally not large enough to keep them entirely above water. This often happens when pleasure boats capsize. All want to immediately get out of the water on top of the overturned or half-filled boat, and all are drowned except those whom the wrecked craft will wholly bear up. If they would only trust to ninety-nine hundredths of their bodies, and the disabled boat the other hundredth, they might all be saved under most circumstances. An over-turned or half-filled wooden boat will sustain more people than it will carry. It would keep the heads above water of as mamy people as could get their hands on the gunwale. These are simple facts, easily learned, and may some day save your life.

THE DOCTOR'S STORY.

"I have a little story to tell you children," the old doctor said to the young people the other evening. "One day—a long, hot day it had been, too—I met my father on the road to town.

'I wish you would take this package to the village for me, Jim,' he said, hesitatingly.

Now I was a boy of twelve, and not fond of work, and was just out of the hay-field, where I had been at work since daybreak. I was tired, dusty and hungry. It was two miles into town. I wanted to get my supper and to wash and dress for singing school.

My first impulse was to refuse, and to do it harshly, for I was vexed that he should ask me to do it after my long day's work. If I did refuse he would go himself. He was a gentle, patient old man. But something stopped me—one of God's good angels, I think.

'Of course, father, I'll take it,' I said heartily, giving my scythe to one of the men. He gave me the package.

'Thank you, Jim,' he said; 'I was going myself, but somehow I don't feel very strong to-day.'

He walked with me to the road that turned off to town. As he left me he put his hand on my arm, saying again, 'Thank you, my son. You've always been a good boy to me, Jim.'

I hurried into town and back again. When I came near the house I saw a crowd of farm hands at the door. One of them came running to me, the tears rolling down his face. 'Your father,' he said, 'fell dead just as he reached the house. The last words he spoke were to you.'

I'm an old man now, but I have thanked God over and over again, in all the years that have passed since that hour that those last words were, 'You've always been a good boy to me'."

DRINKING IN SCOTLAND.

A writer in the Edinburgh Daily Review makes the following statements: "The other day in the ladies' room of a confectioner's in Edinburgh, I counted 12 ladies at one time, each drinking spirits, porter or ale—none had wine; one, a girl not over 14 years old, consumed a bottle of stout. At the counter of the same shop, while I was buying some "sweeties," two young ladies under 20 paid for three 'brandies and soda.' In the same place, at another time, about noon, I was surprised to see a lady order and drink a glass of raw brandy, and go away without eating anything. A friend who witnessed a similar incident said the draught was followed by a liberal application of eau de cologne, to cover the offensive smell. I am creditably informed that school girls with books in hand, go to the confectioner's for "nips" of cherry brandy, more than one such visit being paid by the same girl at different shops on her way home; and in one case the owner of the shop got a severe reprimand from a young girl for having entered her brandy in the family pass book, as she intended to pay for it herself separately."

"ON TAWP OF THE 'BUS."—Englishmen traveling through here are careless about the way baggage containing valuables is handled. A marquis inquired of a Walker House clerk Monday night: "Say, me friend, do you know what has become of me brown valise? I cawn't afford to lose thawt, y'know. It has awl me money and jewelry in it." When asked where he saw it last, he replied: "I saw it fired up on tawp of the 'bus, y'know." That was the way he had of caring for his valuables. The runner turned up with the valise presently, it having gone to the other station on a different 'bus than the Englishman, who rode up in the vehicle coming directly from the station to the hotel.—Salt Lake Herald.

Gates of the City.

A pilgrim once—so runs an ancient tale—
Old, worn and spent, crept down a shadowed vale.
On either hand rose mountains bleak and high;
Chill was the gusty air, and dark the sky,
The path was rugged and his feet were bare—
His faded cheek was seamed by age and care—
His heavy eyes upon the ground were cast,
And every step seemed feebler than the last.

The valley ended where a naked rock
Rose, sheer from earth to heaven, as if to mock
The pilgrim who had crept that toilsome way.
But while his dim and weary eyes essay
To find an outlet in the mountain side,
A ponderous sculptured brazen door he spied,
And, tottering toward it with fast-failing breath,
Above the portal read—"The Gate of Death."

He could not stay his feet that led thereto,
It yielded to his touch, and passing through
He came into a world all bright and fair,
Blue were the heavens and balmy was the air;
And lo! the blood of youth was in his veins,
And he was clad in robes that held no stains
Of his long pilgrimage. Amazed, he turned,
Behold! a golden door behind him burned
In that fair sunlight, and his wondering eyes.
Now lusterful and clear as those new skies,
Free from the mists of age, of care and strife,
Above the portal read—"The Gate of Life."

TWO WAR STORIES.

That reminds me," said an old Indianian, "of the Fourth of July, 1864, at Kenesaw Mountain, or at least of the Kenesaw campaign. The two armies were so close to each other at that time that one could hear the bands of the other side playing almost as plain as their own. In the morning, of course, the bands in the Union army celebrated the day by playing the national airs, while at the same time the bands in the Confederate army played 'Dixie,' 'Bonnie Blue Flag' and other airs then in favor with the rebels. After there had been a spirited contest as to which side could make the most noise there was an interval of silence, and, very much to the surprise of the Union troops, one of the bands in the rebel camp played 'Hail Columbia.' Not to be outdone in the matter of courtesy, one of the Union bands played 'Dixie,' so there was for the time an interchange of compliments the Union bands playing the Confederate air and the Confederate bands playing the national air. This provoked considerable enthusiam and a great deal of good feeling on both sides. The picket lines were for a time as peaceful as though the men were on a picnic excursion, but before the day was ended there came a signal to advance, and the very men who had been cheering each other were engaged in that fierce skirmish incident to the movement that turned the rebel position at Marietta. Whenever the picture of old Kenesaw comes before me my mind reverts back to the celebration of a national holiday, and I have no doubt that the playing of the national airs in the rebel camp gave the rebels as much pleasure as it did ourselves."

"While the army, or rather the two armies were in camp at Chattanooga, I spent a good many nights on the outposts, and I never had so keen an appreciation of music as on the beautiful moonlight nights, when scores of bands in the rival camps would play for the half hour proceeding taps. On one side was a canvas city of 50,000 stalwart men in blue. Over on Mission Ridge and a little beyond were as many men in gray. There were probably 20 or 30 excellent bands in each army, and when they all played national airs on one side, and Confederate airs on the other, the pickets midway between the monster camps had the benefit of both concerts. I remember one night, after most of the bands had retired from the contest, three or four of the best in each army played for an hour or more as if in rivalry. In the Union army after the bands had rendered 'Hail Columbia,' there would be cheer on cheer from 10,000 throats. At the same time the strains of 'Bonnie Blue Flag' would come from the other side to be followed by cheer on cheer from the other side. At last the band on the Union side struck up 'The Girl I Left Behind Me,' and for a minute there was silence over in the other camp, then the rebel band caught up the same strain and they played it together to the end. Then, as if by common impulse, came cheer on cheer from both camps, and the pickets, throwing caution to the winds, stood up and cheered together.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

MORBID IMPULSES.

What is the cause of a person having a feeling as though he had to jump or throw himself down, while standing near the edge of the wall of a high building, or place 40 or 50 feet above the ground? This question is asked of the editor of the Herald of Health, and his answer in the journal is as follows: "This feeling is due, we think, to a sudden confusion of mind produced by the new situation in which one finds himwhen brought to survey the prospect from a lofty elevation. It is a change in relation to one's surroundings that seems at first to set experience at fault, and the faculties of perception, therefore, are at first disturbed and out of co-ordination. Size, weight, locality, etc., in many persons may require time to adjust themselves to the new conditions. Men who are accustomed to work at great elevations—roofers, painters, etc.,—do not as a rule suffer from such morbid sensations, because their faculties have become educated to the relations of altitude."

"Say Maria," exclaimed Mr. Blobson, the other day, "I move that we suspend the long haul clause." "What do you mean?" demanded Mrs. Blobson. "I mean," said Mr. Blobson, "that instead of pushing the baby carriage around four blocks we try one block for a while. Otherwise, I shall be obliged to raise the rates of transportation."—Burlington Free Press.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 10, 1887.

MR. BLAINE sailed for Europe Wednesday, with his wife and two daughters.

IT is expected that the president will call an extra session of Congress to meet about October 1.

THE president does not enjoy attending funerals, apparently. He was not present at the funeral of Vice President Hendricks, nor that at of Vice President Wheeler this week.

THE brevity and uncertainty of life is illustrated in the rather singular fact that there is now living but one ex-president of this country, Rutherford B. Hayes, of Fremont, O., and one vice-president, Hannibal Hamlin, of Bangor, Me.

THERE is a material for a strong temperance sermon in the story of the Rhode Island manufacturer who, on a recent Saturday, paid his employes $700 in marked bills. On the following Monday $400 of these bills were deposited in the bank by saloon keepers.

THE Republicans in the Legislature have done pretty well to come so near to favorable action on the question of submitting a prohibitory constitutional amendent to the people, but they should do better. Enough voted against the measure in the house to defeat it, and they should be labordd with to bring them to a yea vote when the matter comes up again next week.

JUSTICE is occassionally quick-footed. Two discharged employes who burned a Brooklyn cooperage factory a week ago last Saturday night were sentenced to fourteen years in Sing Sing last Friday, and they may be called on to answer the charge of murder yet, as the watchman was burned in the fire. Crime would lose somewhat of its attractiveness if punishment always followed as closely in its wake.

EX-VICE PRESIDENT William A. Wheeler died at Malone, N. Y., last Saturday, having been in failing health for several years. Mr. Wheeler served several years in Congress, being one of the most influential members of the New York delegation, and his public career was an honorable and faithful one throughout. The loss of his wife ten years ago was a great blow to him, and he had lived in comparative seclusion since his retirement from the vice presidency.

DISSENSIONS among the Knights of Labor are becoming so frequent and serious that the order is fast losing its prestige and power. The latest piece of folly on the part of the leaders is the boycott of a carpet factory, not because of any difficulty with the firm, but because they employ men belonging to an assembly which the executive board has suspended. But the boycott has already lost its terrors for manufacturers, and performances of this kind only make the board ridiculous.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Springfield Republican charged the legislative committee on prisons with very unbecoming conduct at a Northampton hotel last week, because of their inability to obtain liquor. The committee of the Legislature are spending too much money in junketing trips, some $7000 having been spent this way during the present session, against $1500 expended for similar purposes ten years ago. If committee-men must drink, they should have decency enough to do it in private, and chairmen of the committee should see that the members themselves, and not the state, pay for their liquor and cigars.

AN important measure has been passed to be engrossed in both branches of the Legislature, providing for the incorporation of churches, so that they may control their property and manage their secular affairs without the interposition of a parish or society. There has been a growing feeling among the churches that such a step was desirable, and some have organized under the general laws, while a few have obtained a special act of incorporation from the Legislature. Among the latter is the Baptish church in Palmer, which was incorporation by an act passed early in the present session, being, we believe, the first church in the county to take this step. There is no reason why a church should not be self-governing as well as any other organization.

It does seem humiliating to see a pugilist pocket more money in a year than a dignified Episcopalian or Roman Catholic bishop, a double curve pitcher commanding more salary than a university professor, a "fly-catcher" exceeding the earning of a railroad president, and a mountebank comedian, who began by acting as a cow, drawing a larger income than the President of the United States.—Lowell Courier.

The Mercantile Gazette, in its report on the industries of Palmer, writes as follows:

It is with pleasure that we head our column of the prominent and enterprising business men of Palmer with the name of W. R. Milligan. Mr. Milligan came to this town in the year 1880 with a thorough knowledge of the retail boot and shoe business, starting in a small way as he did and competing at that time with stores that carried a stock three times the size of his, he has not been the man to fear competition. During his stay of seven years here there have been many changes in this branch of business. Some of his competitors have failed, some have sold out, and others have been obliged to pack up and move to other fields in trying to compete with his establishment. As a result, to-day there is not a person connected with the sale of boots and shoes in Palmer who was here when Mr. Milligan started in business, and it is with pride that we speak of him as the leading boot and shoe dealer in this section and the proprietor of a store carrying the largest and best selected stock of boots, shoes, rubbers and slippers to be found outside of our large cities. In his men's department will always be found both hand and machine sewed goods of the leading makes at prices to suit both the millionaire and the laboring man. Ladies' fine shoes and slippers are shown in great variety, prominent in this department being the celebrated Tinkham, Reed and Gifford French Kid Shoes, of which he has the agency for Palmer. Boys', misses' and children's shoes are also shown in several grades, and in fact everything usually found in a first class boot and shoe store can be obtained here. The business of this store is not confined to Palmer alone, and customers from Ware, Belchertown, Gilbertville and Hardwick on the north, and Monson, Brimfield, Wales and Holland on the south, are often seen here taking advantage of the EXTREME LOW PRICES offered in boots and shoes. Space will not permit of further description of this store, but we can recommend all our readers who want a good article when buying their boots and shoes at a low price to visit Milligan's family shoe store, Palmer, Mass.

O. P. Allen has received some fifty copies of the annual report of the state board of agriculture, for free distribution among members of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society.

Mrs. Maria Hatch, who for several years has conducted a large boarding house in the Cross block on Main street, has gone to South Framingham, where she will run a similar establishment.

In digging holes for the electric light poles on South Main street, Wednesday morning, a pick was accidently put through a branch pipe of the Palmer Water Company, causing a shut-off of the water for a short time in that section.

A horse belonging to Wales parties became frightened at the depot Tuesday morning and ran under the porch, across the platform and upon the Boston and Albany tracks, where the vehicle was overturned and somewhat damaged.

Rev. H. W. Pope addresses the New Haven union of the Y. P. S. C. E. on the 20th of this month, the Manchester union on the 23d, and presents a paper on "Uniform Topics for the Prayer Meeting" at the Saratoga Convention, July 5–7.

These officers have been elected by the Ancient Order of Hibernians: President, J. J. Moynahan; vice president, J. T. Donovan; recording secretary, J. P. O'Connor; financial secretary, Hugh Hanley; treasurer, M. J. Dawson. The order is in a prosperous condition.

The Boston and Albany road offers six different routes to the annual meeting of the National Educational Association at Chicago, July 12–15, the round-trip fares ranging from $22 to $28.50. Tickets can also be purchased via the New London Northern and Central Vermont roads at $22 and $25.

Next Sunday is Children's Sunday, but it will be observed only at the Congregational church, where an appropriate address will be given by the pastor in the morning, and the children of the Sunday school will give a concert in the evening. The other churches have postponed their exercises until one week later.

The 11.45 a. m. train north on the Ware River road last Saturday found a tie and a number of stones piled on the curve of the track just this side of Thorndike, but the obstruction was discovered in time to prevent any damage. It was found that the mischief had been done by young boys, who will doubtless be placed on probation.

A new express agent, in the person of W. O. Richardson, took possession of the American Express Company's business at this place Wednesday morning, much to the gratification of the business men of the place. At the same time O. E. Crawford resumed his old run between Palmer and Brattleboro, and F. E. Sedgwick, who had this place, was offered a run on the Athol road, but declined.

There is some talk of having a Fourth of July celebration in this village, it having been several years since anything of the kind has been done. The proposed programme includes a procession of antiques and horibles in the morning, with horse racing and other sports on the park in the afternoon. The idea is a good one, and might easily be carried out successfully with a little coöperation by all.

Last Saturday F. O. Munger and H. C. Sanger were before the district court for trespassing on land of Horace Stimpson while fishing, and each paid costs of nearly $5. Monday a hearing was held in the matter of liquor found on the premises of William Thompson, and it was declared forfeited. Tuesday he was fined $50 and costs for illegal keeping of liquor, but appealed. Wednesday James Stone paid $3 and costs for drunkenness.

North Wilbraham people have petitioned the Boston and Albany road to continue the new accommodation train between Palmer and Worcester, through to Springfield. Particularly do they want it to run through to Springfield in the afternoon, as now they have no train west between 10.40 a. m. and 6.20 p. m., nearly eight hours. Passengers for Springfield are frequently left at this place, and obliged to wait three hours and a half before they can go on.

A gang of some fifty Italians came to Palmer from Amherst last Friday afternoon, being on a strike, and went to Ware to get their pay. Finding that they could not get their money at once they came back to Palmer and proceeded to camp out on the land of the railroad company, but were invited to leave, and went across the river into Knox's pasture, where they camped until Saturday night, when it was decided to return to Amherst and work again.

Hotel landlords are greatly annoyed by guests who at the conclusion of a meal oftentimes slip a napkin or some other small article of the table furniture into their pocket and carry it away with them, and Palmer landlords have suffered with the rest. The proprietor of the Weeks House has at various times missed such articles, and when a silver spoon dropped from the clothing of a guest as he was leaving the dining room Wednesday noon, nothing could be more natural than to give him into the custody of an officer. But "Jim" swore that he was innocent as a child unborn, and plead so hard that he was allowed to continue his run in peace, though the "boys" gave him a warm reception when he came up to-day.

AN UNSUCCESSFUL RAID.

Messrs. Wright and Merriam of the liquor prosecuting committee, accompanied by Officer Healey, made a raid on the Nassowanno House last Saturday evening, but failed to bring the ardent to light, although it is reported they came within five feet of finding the stuff. The clerk was ordered to open the safe in the office, but refused, whereupon the committee announced their intention of waiting until it was opened,—a month if necessary. They waited until midnight, when the clerk informed them that the house was about to close for the night, and if they wanted rooms well and good, if not they were requested to leave, and they left.

NEW PALMER DIRECTORY.

Nothing in the shape of a directory of Palmer has been published since 1884, and the one at that time was only a copy of the assessors' list, sometimes correct, but oftener not. In fact no good directory of the town has been published since 1879. In view of this fact, and the fact that there is an almost daily call for one, C. B. Fisk & Co. have decided to publish such a work, and the compiling of it is well under way. It will be accurate and complete, containing the names of all the adult population, with their place of residence and occupation, not copied from the assessors' list, but obtained by a personal canvass in each village. It will be completed as soon as possible, and the work issued immediately.

A LITTLE MISUNDERSTANDING.

The electric light company ran against a snag Tuesday morning in its work of setting poles through the village. Holes were dug for a post in front of the residence of J. M. Converse, also for two in front of his business blocks on Main street, when Mr. Converse appeared and forbade the setting of the same. Mr. Heery, manager and president of the light company, claimed to have the permission of the selectmen to set the poles through the streets, and the men declined to cease work without orders from him, so the aid of a sheriff was obtained, and the work suspended. It was found that the permission from the selectmen was only verbal, and they were then petitioned for something binding, and gave permission to go ahead and set poles, with this condition, that where any opposition is made a hearing in the matter shall be had.

THE BOSTON AND ALBANY ROAD SUED BY A PALMER MAN.

William Mason, a colored man living in this village, has brought suit against the Boston and Albany road for $3000 damages, for false imprisonment, rough handling, and putting him off a train after he had paid his fare. Mason's story is that two weeks ago to-morrow night he got upon a train on the Athol branch at Indian Orchard with a ticket for Three Rivers. The conductor took the pasteboard, and after a stop at the Red Bridge station demanded another ticket. Mason protested that he had given one, and called upon Selectman Joseph Kerigan of this town, who sat in the next seat, to corroberate his statement. Mr. Kerigan also said Mason had given a ticket, but notwithstanding, the conductor and brakeman grappled with him at Three Rivers, tore his clothes and roughly handled him in removing him from the train, and gave him in charge of an officer. He feels that his dignity and reputation were damaged to the extent of $3000 thereby, and has brought suit accordingly. The papers were served on G. A. Rice, the local agent of the company, last Friday.

A WORD OF THANKS.

Editor Journal: — Allow me, through the columns of your paper, to extend to the people of Palmer my heartfelt thanks for the liberal and generous assistance they have given me in the fair just closed. I thank them in my own name, and in the name of my parishioners. I did not, indeed, need this last manifestation of their good will to assure me of their warmth of heart and nobility of soul. Never have I asked for their help, that they have not willingly and zealously responded. The sacrifices they have made, I can never forget. Nor can I fully express the deep gratitude I feel. I can only say, may they see the fruit of their generosity in the benefits that, I hope, will accrue to society, the purification and elevation of which are the objects of religion. May an ever pure womanhood—a strong manhood—and a noble citizenship be their gratification. Nine years have I labored in this, our beautiful village, and it has been a very great satisfaction that my efforts to promote the cause of morality, religion and good citizenship, have ever met with the hearty coöperation of all my fellow townsmen. They have ever encouraged and cheered me on. And that my work has not ceased to be appreciated, the magnificent success of this bazar—a success surpassing my highest expectations—clearly proves. But valuable as has been the monetary assistance, yet that which touches me most deeply, too deeply, indeed, for words to express, is the spirit which has animated this liberal giving. May God reward all, as their great charity of heart deserves.

THOMAS J. SULLIVAN,
Pastor of St. Thomas' Catholic Church.

A FAMILY MEMORIAL.

Standing near the entrance of the cemetery at Four Corners may be seen a unique monument recently erected by the sons of William and Jonathan McElwain. This monumental shaft adorns the center of the family lot, and by its striking appearance at once arrests the attention of the visitor. The design is that of an aged tree, broken off at about seven feet from its base, and having a diameter of a little more than two feet at its widest part. The mechanical execution is wonderful, reproducing as it does with minute fidelity the grain of both trunk and bark in their finest fibres. Twining about the old stump are creeping ivy vines beautifully carved, also a cluster of ferns near the base, and in front. On either side of this shaft are protuberances representing four branches, which have been broken off by old age. There are three places on the main trunk where the bark is partially stripped away, and lies in dependent folds, affording a smooth surface for the various inscriptions. The graves are adorned by head stones of the same material, representing the fallen and broken branches of the tree, on which are carved the initials of the departed. This family tribute was designed and carved in Elyria, Ohio, where one of the sons resides, and is made from Indiana limestone, which stands the weather better than marble and is being used very extensively in some of the best cemeteries of the West. The McElwain family, as is well known, is one of the oldest in this vicinity, both William and Jonathan being born and brought up in Palmer, as was also their father before them. Especially appropriate is this memorial, as William had reached the age of 72, and his wife the still riper age of 83 years at the time of death. Jonathan was over 80, while his wife, who still survives him, has already reached an equal period of longevity. Such mementoes of filial affecare not only an ornament to the place in which they stand, but are silent witnesses of the affectionate reverence on the part of their children, which is none too numerous in this day.

ST. THOMAS' FAIR.

The fair of St. Thomas' Catholic society closed Tuesday evening after a successful run of six nights, having been continued one night longer than the original plan. The interest in the voting on the cane was not very lively until the last night, when the different sides kept a close watch of each other, and money in abundance was forthcoming. Each side felt confident of winning, but when the result was announced at 10.30 Stockwell of the wire mill was found to have 1013 votes, Fuller of Holden's mill 1338, Pinney of the carpet mill 1816, and consequently the lucky contestant. He was brought down from the mill by the committee, and the cane was presented to him by Father Sullivan, he but was too much surprised to more than express his thanks to his friends. Wednesday evening the committee selected to dispose of the various articles donated, met and awarded them as follows:

Pair live ducks, Henry Thompson; pair slippers, John Kerigan; lemonade set, Geo. W. Ely; table spread, Henry Lovett; dozen napkins, Michael Roche, Thorndike; glass set, L. Musante; carving knife and fork, Mrs. Minnie S. Upham; plaque, Rev. W. C. McCaughen, Monson; lamp, William H. Wilder; lemonade set, Mrs. Gustafson; handkerchief holder, Mamie Thompson; cut of cotton cloth, Daniel McArter, Three Rivers; meerschaum pipe, P. J. Griffin, North Wilbraham; album, Rev. Fr. Smythe, Westfield; tidies, Ed. Goodes; bed spread, Lizzie Keefe, Thorndike; carpet, Maggie Mulvihill; box cigars, J. C. Byrne, Thorndike; china cups and saucers, James Healey; sofa pillow, J. M. Hamilton; baby carriage, Edwin Ball; Saratoga trunk, Sarah Long; clothes reel, F. N. Carpenter; pair blankets, James Eagan, North Wilbraham; napkin ring, D. Sugrue; ladies' work basket, Alice Grady; silver pickle castor, Bridget Dewire; toilet case, P. Duffy, Monson; hat, Michael Collins, North Wilbraham; doll, Annie Scanlan, South Monson; ton of coal, John Burns; silver castor, John Reilley, Thorndike; silver spoons, Mrs. Daniel Hagerty, Springfield; suit of clothes, Rev. T. J. Sullivan; barrel of flour, D. Sugrue; French clock, Joseph Kerigan; quarter of beef, Mrs. William Thompson; barrel of flour, John Murphy, North Wilbraham; child's cloak and bonnet, A. Pinney; silver cake basket, Rev. W. C. McCaughen, Monson; shaving set, Maggie Wallace, Wilbraham; hanging lamp, Michael Rooney; silver watch, M. Roche, Thorndike; harness, James Cashman; lace spread and pillow shams, J. L. Crawford, Norwich, Conn.; guess cake, Mrs. James Henighan; pin cushion, Mrs. D. Crowley.

Besides the articles previously mentioned, these donations were made: C. L. Gardner, $10; H. B. Knox, $5; LeGro & Lynde, $5; H. C. Strong, $4; J. B. Shaw, pair of blankets. The net receipts will probably exceed $1200.

WEST BRIMFIELD.

Misses Stella Moulton of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Mary Tiffany of Indiana, Pa., have been visiting Mrs. F. S. King. Miss Moulton is a nurse in a Brooklyn hospital.

Again West Brimfield is left without a postmaster, and no way of getting mail except by going to Palmer for it. It seems that some time ago the postmaster, Norman Powers, because sick of his job when more than one mail a day was received, and forwarded his resignation. Other parties were offered the office, but no one would accept it, and Mr. Powers was not relieved, until now he refuses to receive mail.

WILBRAHAM.

Miss Clara Warner is home for a few days' vacation.

Miss Julia Green has taken the position of assistant at the post office.

The ladies' society met Wednesday afternoon and evening at the home of Mrs. Laura Warner.

There was an entertainment at the house of S. J. Goodenough Wednesday evening, consisting of literary exercises, vocal and instrumental music.

Miss Annie Noble and Mr. Penrose Baldwin of Lenoir, N. C, were married at the bride's home Wednesday afternoon, and started for their southern home on the evening train.

Both churches will observe children's day next Sunday. At the North church the morning services will be wholly by the Sabbath school children. At the South church there will be appropriate preaching by the pastor, and a children's concert in the evening.

BONDSVILLE.

The schools close next week Thursday.

Another raid was made on the liquor sellers last Friday night.

There was a quiet wedding Tuesday evening at A. M. Bond's residence, when Albert H. Hurd and Miss Nettie Bond were married by Rev. A. C. Hurd. The happy pair left for Worcester, their future home, on the 7.41 train.

THREE RIVERS.

T. D. Potter's buildings, formerly owned by L. Griffin, are being painted, both inside and out.

The calico party given by the Sons of Temperance last Monday evening was well attended, and a very enjoyable time had.

Rev. F. B. Joy has accepted a unanimous call to the church in East Longmeadow, and commenced his pastorate the first Sunday in this month.

Mrs. Dunn's block, formerly used as a post office, is being thoroughly repaired, having been raised about three feet and a new brick underpinning put in, which is a great improvement.

The ladies of the Union church will hold their annual strawberry festival at the vestry of the church next Wednesday evening. A sufficient supply of ice cream will be provided so that all can be served who wish. The crowning feature of the evening will be the "Deacons' Table," which will be revealed at precisely half-past eight, with appropriate exercises. The public is cordially invited.

Now that the bridge is being repaired, why wouldn't it be a good glan, while the workmen are here, to have a walk made especially for the loafers who congregate on the bridge every evening? If this was done ladies passing by would be saved a great deal of annoyance. Last year the police officers received special orders from the selectmen to keep the walk clear; this year no authority having been given them they do not care to assume it. It certainly is a nuisance, and something should be done to stop the blocking up of the walks by a crowd of men and boys.

WARREN.

The Methodists have a lawn party in contemplation.

Mrs. Chadsey and daughter have been stopping the past two weeks in New York.

Rev. Mr. Clark and wife have been taking a trip to the northern part of the state the past week, with a private conveyance.

Miss Mabel Patrick has left her position in the postoffice, and her place will be filled by Mrs. Nichols, the postmaster's wife.

Mr. and Mrs. Whipple and Mrs. Dr. Carpenter, with Miss Hutchins of Ware, have been attending the meetings at Saratoga the past week.

Dr. Clarence Cutler arrived home from China, last week, where he has spent nine years, and of course finds great changes in his native town. He had a very rough voyage part of the trip home.

The Misses Tagen were married in the Catholic church Tuesday evening. One of them has been teaching the past year, and will be much missed. Her place will be filled by Miss Newell.

The constables have made a raid on the liquor sellers at West Warren. It is expected that they will continue their work in Warren village till there is a change in our pleasant town, and one can walk the streets without meeting so many intoxicated persons.

The new hotel is open and ready for guests. It has all the modern conveniences. Electric bells and speaking tubes all over the house, and a much needed want has been filled. It will no doubt have a large number of visitors this summer, as there are many attractions to make it a pleasant stopping place.

WEST WARREN.

Miss Sarah Lombard of Springfield spent Sunday at home.

Willie Hitchcock of Lynn is spending a few days in town.

Mrs. W. H. Beaman of Springfield is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Armory Crossman.

Signo Bosco appeared at Washington hall Wednesday night, for a three nights' engagement. He claims to be the "Prince of Magicians," and gives away several costly gifts each night.

Children's Sunday will be observed at the Methodist church next Sabbath, the exercises beginning at five o'clock in the afternoon. In the morning several children are to be baptized, and Rev. J. S. Barrows of Brookfield will be present.

The Good Templars initiated sixteen new members Monday night. The lodge has done considerable good work since it was organized, and has grown so rapidly in membership that its present quarters will not admit of a full attendance at the meetings.

Saturday night the officers made a raid on several of the saloons in the village, but as it was pretty well known they were coming nothing was found but some beer at Peltier's, and it has been sent away to be analyzed. But Monday they made a grand stroke. A warrant had been made out for M. M. Hennebry for illegal sales in March and April, and while Officers Putnam and Smith were serving the warrant they looked around Hennebry's drug store and found a couple of jugs of whisky. He was fined $50 and costs, but appealed, and furnished bonds for the August term of court. The seized liquor will be brought up at a later day.

BELCHERTOWN.

The center schools were closed last Friday.

The grading about the library building has been finished, and a fence put up.

T. J. S. Parsons has improved the looks of his house on Main street by painting and new fencing.

Rev. P. W. Lyman attended the funeral of Rev. O. A. Oviatt of Sudbury, last Saturday afternoon.

Summer visitors are coming to this place earlier than usual. D. V. Fuller's house is rapidly filling.

The Young Ladies' Guild have fitted up rooms at the residence of B. Butler, and ice cream and cake will be served every Saturday evening during the summer.

Rev. George A. Oviatt of Sudbury, whose death occurred last week, was the sixth pastor of the Congregational church in this place, from 1841 to 1845. He made his last visit to Belchertown two years ago. Only two of the eleven pastors of this church are now living, Rev. W. W. Woodward and Rev. P. W. Lyman.

Miss Jennie M. Read, daughter of Rev. William Read, has issued a book of poems, a fine volume of upwards of two hundred pages, beautifully printed and bound, and the paper is of excellent quality. The poetic gems comprising this volume are well worthy of the attractive setting. She has for several years been an occasional writer to the Christian Secretary of Hartford, Conn. She has in her last poems achieved a marked success, as she has a true poetic gift; the inspiration of high ideals wrought into sweet, pure, and noble thoughts and utterances. She has illustrated in these books some fine landscape, in oil painting and water colors, also flowers and other attractive pictures.

REV. P. W. LYMAN'S FAREWELL SERMON.

Rev. P. W. Lyman preached his farewell sermon to a large audience last Sunday morning, and his many friends listened to his last sermon as pastor with more than usual interest, the audience containing many from out of town. The sermon was from the texts Numbers 6: 24–26, and Second Corinthians 13: 11. He spoke of his pastoral duration as something rare, only two other ministers in the conference being the same as when he commenced his pastorate. He reviewed the progress in both public and private affairs since his coming, and thought the decline in church attendance attributable to natural causes, in part at least, over which no man had control. though the membership of the church numbers nearly the same as at the commencement of his ministry. During this time 1517 sermons have been prepared and delivered, and preparations for other religious meetings to the number of 2000; 310 funerals have been attended, over 80 marriages solemnized; all the meetings of the conference of churches, with one exception, have been attended, with 32 ecclesiastical councils and other meetings pertaining to the church and society. He concluded by quoting from the text: "Finally, brethren, farewell: be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you." It is with feelings of regret that pastor and people are severed, as he has been a true, faithful, earnest worker for the past 16 years in the Congregational church of this place, and his absence will be deeply felt.

MONSON.

Ed White has gone to Springfield to work.

Henry McMaster has gone to Allston, visiting.

There will be a Sabbath school concert at the M. E. church next Sunday evening. Subject: "The King's Garden.

The class of '87 of the academy will give an ice cream and cake social at Academy Hall to-night. All are invited.

Harvey & Stewart have the barn of John Grady nearly completed. They have in prospect several other buildings.

The chemical fire engines are expected to arrive in a few days, and where to locate and house them is still undecided.

A new Congregational church is being erected in Pomona, Cal., and it is probable that Rev. C. B. Sumner, formerly of Monson, will be the pastor.

The roadway of the new iron bridge near Cushman's mill will be several feet wider than the present structure, and a much pleasanter sight to behold.

Stephen H. Newton has accepted a position in the People's market, and will hereafter dispense blessings in the shape of sea food to the hungry public.

Letters received from Rev. Fr. Lee announce his safe arrival in London, and his escape from sea sickness, reporting a very favorable voyage and improving health.

Will Topliff, formerly of Monson, but now of Pomona, Cal., invested $700 in real estate when he first located there, for which he has recently been offered $2000.

The Universalist society is arranging for a strawberry and ice cream festival some evening next week, and will undoubtedly have a full house, as the admission is free.

A. H. Danforth has the contract for building a dwelling house for Henry Barlow on Pease avenue, and work is progressing so it will be finished in about six weeks.

Richard Powers, of the firm of Powers Bros., Norwich, Ct., made a flying visit to town last Tuesday, and was heartily welcomed by old friends and acquaintances.

Workmen are engaged in the Center cemetery, trimming the shrubbery, cutting grass, and otherwise improving the general appearance of the grounds and surroundings.

Ex-Gov. Trask and his brother, Benjamin Trask of Springfield, were in Monson Wednesday in attendance at the funeral of Mrs. Laura Squier, widow of the late Daniel Squier.

The selectmen have been viewing suitable locations for the placing of the electric light poles, and Manager Heery has ordered some splendid Michigan poles of extra length and size.

Dr. G. E. Fuller attended the Massachusetts Medical Convention at Boston Wednesday, and listened to the after-dinner speeches of Gov. Ames, George M. Stearns and others.

The Shamrocks came off victorious Tuesday afternoon, beating a picked nine 28 to 21. Brennon of the Shamrocks is making great proficiency, and many of his moves equal more noted players.

The horse of William Weeks of Hampden became frightened by the detaching of the whiffletree last Sunday evening, as Mr. Weeks was coming to the village, and ran, but fortunately did no damage.

Fishing and fishing parties are the topics of the day. Four young men went down to the state line last Thursday evening. After getting about 100 they turned too and had a fish fry, the first of the season.

When the great and general court get full reports from the junketing committees and their necessary refreshments, our assessors will lay the taxes proportionate on our people. Of course all will say "Let us have piece."

Rev. Mr. Byington, having packed his personal effects, left for Boston last Saturday. Mrs. H. Lyon is packing preparatory to leaving for Springfield. We read the expressions of sorrow in the countenances of friends who mourn their exit.

Mrs. Mary Butler, the only surviving pensioner in this town of the war of 1812, had a paralytic shock last Friday. She rallied, however, on Saturday, so as to be able to execute her pension papers, but has since been failing, and probably can survive but a few days.

The dedication of the new academy occurs on Wednesday, the 29th. Professor Curtis of Chicago gives the address, subject: "The Christian Academy." Rev. James Tufts will give a history of the academy, and Geo. F. Prentiss of New Haven will read a poem.

At the regular monthly meeting of the selectmen last Monday afternoon, the usual amount of regular business was transacted, reports of road agents examined, bills audited, approved and paid. S. F. Cushman acted as treasurer in the absence of E. S. Cushman, who is west purchasing wool.

The town farm barn is being pushed forward to completion. The committee having it in charge will speedily consummate the plans indicated by the vote of the town, and the expense which many taxpayers have feared will undoubtedly be within the appropriation, under the shrewd business management of Chairman Carpenter.

Tuesday afternoon the selectmen viewed the premises westerly of the homestead of the late Alvan Smith, M. D., on petition for the laying out of a road from Morris street to intersect the road westerly from Flynt's store. The petitioners were represented by W. N. Flynt, and Dr. Homer Smith of Palmer and Dr. Frank Smith of Stafford appeared to protect the interests of their father's estate.

Some of the older residents of Monson will remember Mrs. Lucretia Chapman Hyde, who died at her home in Wapping, Ct., April 29th. In the early part of her life she lived in Pittsfield, where her father, Dea. Daniel Chapman, resided. She married Tertius Hyde about 1848, and came to Monson to live where five children were born to them, which she buried here, and her husband also. She spent the remainder of her life with relatives in and around Hartford. For years she lived with Mrs. Sadd, who, with Mrs. Bissell, ministered to her in her last sickness. She fully expected to recover. Her life was very consistent; she was always ready for every good word and work. Her light was never under a bushel, but her Savior's work was her's. "For her to die was gain."

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, June 8th, 1887.

Thursday was a day of important action in both branches. In the House it was nearly all given to the debate on the soldiers' exemption bill moved by Mr. Upham of Salem as a substitute for an adverse committee report. It is a permissive bill, saying that veterans may be preferred in appointment to the civil service without examination. Many speakers eulogized the soldiers and brought back vividly the memories of war times, and much stress was laid on the obligations of the state to them for their sufferings and sacrifices for the life of the country. Applause was frequent, and the opposition could do nothing practically against the bill. The vote was 158 to 37 in favor of exemption.

Most of the time in the Senate was spent on the bill to require oleomargarine to be sold in its natural color, nearly like lard. Strong speeches were made for the farming interests by the Senators Gleason of Worcester and of Plymouth, and by Senators Forbes of Worcester and Morse of Norfolk. Senator Glines of Suffolk opposed the bill as against a great manufacturing interest and against poor people. By a vote of 10 to 13 the Senate refused to give the bill a third reading.

By a vote of 30 to 4 the Senate has indefinitely postponed the bill to regulate the business of the commercial agencies, and hold them more responsible for their reports.

Following closely upon the defeat of the oleomargarine bill in the Senate came the adoption Friday of an order requesting and requiring the state board of health to make an investigation and report to the next Legislature on the manufacture and sale of "oleo" and butterine, with especial reference to their healthfulness, and as to whether they are sold in conformity to law.

The Senate, Friday, added an important amendment to the weekly payments law, on motion of Senator Forbes of Worcester, and without a division. It is: "And provided, also, that the railroad commissioners, after a hearing, may exempt any railroad corporation from paying weekly any of its employes who, in the opinion of the commissioners, prefer less frequent payments, and when, in their opinion, the interests of the public and of such employes will not be injured thereby." The House has concurred.

A lively contest occurred in the House Friday over a bill to prevent boycotting. It proposed to prevent by $50 fine or 90 days' imprisonment any person from interfering with any lawful business or profession in any way, or from trying to persuade persons to refuse to work for certain other persons. The labor men were urged by the other side to come to the support of the bill, as a matter of fair policy, but they could not see it in that light, and the bill was finally rejected by 82 to 87 on a roll call.

The Senate continuesto improve its liquor record from a temperance point of view. On Monday it passed to be engrossed without any material debate the House bills providing that no liquor dealer shall sit on the jury in liquor trials, and that any violation of the liquor law shall of itself work a forfeiture of a liquor license. A reconsideration of both votes was afterward moved by Senator Alger of Middlesex. On the last bill it was refused, but on the first it was carried by 16 to 15 by aid of President Boardman's vote, and then the bill was postponed to Monday.

The House put in a new form Tuesday the last section of the bill to divide Attleboro and incorporate the new town of North Attleboro. which provides that the validity of the bill shall depend upon its acceptance by a majority vote of the whole town before November 1, two chances to be given to get the desired vote. The Senate at once agreed without objection, and so it stands that the bill has passed both branches without any debate. It is a sharp contrast to the fight over the division of Beverly, and the difference is due to the fact that in the case of Attleboro the settlement of the question is left to the town, while in the former it was undertaken by the Legislature. Other towns have been divided by popular vote, but usually the Legislature divides, for the proposed town generally has a minority of the votes, and the old town is hostile, so that division would be impossible. Recent cases in point are Beverly, Hopedale, Willis, and Cottage City. By the way, the founder of Hopedale, the man who put the bill through last year, Mr. George Draper, died Tuesday night at the United States hotel in this city.

The House on Monday concurred at once with the Senate order directing that the state board of health investigate the healthfulness of oleomargarine, and whether it is sold according to law, and to report to the next Legislature.

Both branches are at last in accord over the Sunday bill. The final difficulty was settled by a conference committee, and as the bill stands the matter of running Sunday trains or steamboats will be at the discretion of the railroad commissioners.

A bill has come from the Senate judiciary for the punishment of habitual criminals by a severe sentence. If a person is convicted twice of felony and is a third time convicted of a state prison offense, he is to be sentenced to 25 years' imprisonment. By good conduct he may afterward be released at the discretion of the governor and council, on the ticket-of-leave plan, but if he violates its conditions he must return to jail and the time he was out will not count as part of his sentence.

By a vote of 26 to 60 the House has defeated the order for the committee on street railways to sit during the recess and consider matters they had not time to take up this session.

On Tuesday the House had a brisk debate over the bill to pay themselves $1000 salary. On the viva voce vote the yeas had it, but a roll call was ordered and the yeas were 80 to 119 nays (counting pairs). Men who voted for the bill sitting down did not dare to face their constituents recorded on that side. The roll call drove them into their holes.

Wednesday forenoon the House had its expected debate on the prohibitory constitutional amendment, and its friends failed to carry it, by 139 yeas to 74 nays. A two-thirds' vote is necessary, and this vote was so near to it that a reconsideration has been assigned for next Tuesday afternoon, when it is expected that every friend of the resolve will be present. In the main the vote was on party lines, though 17 Republicans voted no and 13 Democrats voted yes, including the three pairs. The debate was well sustained and the women's gallery and the members' gallery also were packed with women eager for the success of the resolve. The strongest speech against it was made by Mr. Smith of Andover, the only minister in the House. Newly all the speaking was in its favor, and the leader on the prohibition side was Mr. Darling of Somerville. Mr. Symonds of Salem refused to vote for the resolve, because he was opposed to it, but as he was a Republican and was elected on the party platform, he did not think that he was at liberty to vote against it. Mr. Smith said his [illegible] to the state was higher than his duty to [illegible]rty. He had been a prohibitionist, [illegible] observation had convinced him that [illegible]drinking was far worse under prohibition than at present.

The House is almost unanimous in favor of the West End bill. LANDON.

The Art Interchange of May 21st, offers as its colored supplement a portrait Study of a Head, by Miss E. C. King, a pupil of the famous French painter, Henner. This sketch reproduces the peculiar tone of hair and quality of flesh, which is characteristic of the works of this painter. The second supplement shows a number of designs for China painting, the motive being the water lily. This charming flower is most ingeniously conventionalized, and variations of it appear on teapot, sugar bowl, slop jar, cups, saucers and tea tray. There are also some exquisite borders suggesting Egyptian art. This series is one of the most admirable for China painting that has ever been published. Other engravings are a Study of a Deer, after Landseer, in pastel effect; Pen and Ink drawing of a female figure, in Watteau costume, for blotting pad, to be done in water color. Pretty outline sketches for pen and ink work on linen. Buttercup design applied to decorating a sugar bowl, and some simple floral designs for teacup and saucer and tea plate.

The text treats of decorative novelties, of painting in water color, oil and mineral colors and house decoration. The Queries and Answer Department is very full, and is of great practical benefit to the art student. The price of this issue including all supplements, is 20 cents. Published by WM. WHITLOCK, 37 and 43 West 22d Street, New York.

OVER A MILLION COPIES SOLD.

The most popular author in the United States is Rev. E. P. Roe, whose books have had an immense sale. Over 1,000,000 copies have thus far been sold. A new powerful war story from his pen will be begun in the next Sunday Globe, June 12. It treats also of the Charleston earthquake. It is entitled "The Earth Trembled." It is Mr. Roe's latest and best work.

For a time my life was despaired of. My trouble was with the Kidneys, Liver and Bladder—also Constipation. Finally I used Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and in my opinion it saved my life. I make this statement to save those who suffer as I did.—A. J. Gifford, Lowell, Mass. Druggists; $1. Send 2-cent stamp to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Some Things Learned by Experience,

That a tablespoonful of salt thrown on a coal fire that is low, will cause it to burn up quickly. That you can clean oil cloth with milk and water; while soap and brush will ruin it. That the skin of a boiled egg is the best remedy you can apply to a boil. That you can't cure Rheumatism or Neuralgia without taking Menard's Rheumatic Bullets. That you can buy them of LeGro & Lynde for $1.00 per bottle. cow7

The Verdict Unanimous.

W. D. Sult, Druggist, Bippus, Ind., testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half dollar a bottle. Sold by LeGro & Lyne, Palmer, and C. E. Blood, Ware. 2

Excitement in Texas.

Great excitement has been caused in the vicinity of Paris, Tex., by the remarkable recovery of Mr. J. E. Corley, who was so helpless he could not turn in bed, or raise his head; everybody said he was dying of Consumption. A trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery was sent him. Finding relief, he bought a large bottle and a box of Dr. King's New Life Pills; by the time he had taken two boxes of Pills and two bottles of the Discovery, he was well and had gained in flesh thirty-six pounds. ENJOY LIFE.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens and oceans, and thousands of means of enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health; but how often do the majority of people feel like giving up disheartened, discouraged and worn out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily find satisfactory proof, that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint are the direct causes of seventy-five per cent of such maladies as biliousness, Indigestion, sick headache, costiveness, nervous prostration, dizziness of the head, palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10c. Try it. 1y46eow

Lariat Bill—The Engineer's Story.

"Well, stranger, 'twas somewhere in sixty-nine
I were runnin' the 'Frisco fast express;
An' from Murder Creek to Blasted Pine
Were nigh onto eighteen mile I guess.
The road were a down grade all the way,
An' we pulled out of Murder a little late,
So I opened the throttle wide that day,
An' a mile a minute was 'bout our gait.

"My fireman's name was Lariat Bill,
A quiet man with an easy way,
Who could rope a steer with a cowboy's skill,
Which he learned in Texas, I've heard him say;
The coil were strong as tempered stee',
An' it went like a bolt from a crossbow flung,
An' arter Bill changed from saddle to wheel,
Just over his head in the cab it hung.

"Well, as I were sayin', we fairly flew
As we struck the curve at Buffalo Spring,
An' I give her full steam, an' put her through,
An' the engine rocked like a living thing;
When all of a sudden I got a scare—
For thar on the track were a little child!
An' right in the path of the engine there
She held out her little hand and smiled!

'I jerked the lever an' whistled for brakes,
The wheels threw sparks like a shower of gold;
But I knew the trouble a down-grade makes,
An' I set my teeth, an' my flesh grew cold;
Then Lariat Bill yanked his long lassoo,
An' out of the engine crept—
He balanced a moment before he threw,
Then out in the air the lariat swept!"

He paused. There were tears in his honest eyes;
The stranger listened with bated breath.
"I know the rest of the tale," he cries;
"He snatched the child from the jaws of death!
'Twas the deed of a hero, from heroes bred,
Whose praises the very angels sing!"
The engineer shook his grizzled head,
And growled: "He didn't do no such thing.

"He aimed at the stump of a big pine tree,
An' the lariat caught with a double hitch,
An' in less than a second the train an' we
Were yanked off the track an' inter the ditch!
'Twere an awful smash, an' it laid me out,
I ain't forgot it, and never shall;
'Were the passengers hurt?' Lemme see—about—
Yes, it killed about forty—but saved the gal."

"You men are so lucky," a fair maiden said,
Discussing the question of dress,
"You're ne'er burdened with petticoats, corsets, or shawls,
Which to us are a source of distress."
"Yes I know," said the youth, who waiting had been,
An argument ready to seize,
"What you've said is all true, yet there's one point you miss,
Your pants never bag at the knees."

A POWERFUL TEMPERANCE SERMON.

"I hear that Smith has sold out his saloon," said one of a couple of middle-aged men who sat sipping their beer and eating a piece of cheese in a Smithfield street saloon last Friday night.

"Yes," responded the other, somewhat slowly.

"What was the reason? I thought he was just coining money there."

The other nibled a cracker abstractly for a moment, and then said: "It is rather a funny story. Smith, you know, lives on Mt. Washington, right near me, where he has an excellent wife, a nice home and three as pretty children as ever played outdoors. All boys, you know, the oldest not over nine, and all about the same size. Smith is a pretty respectable sort of a citizen, never drinks or gambles, and thinks the world of his family.

"Well, he went home one afternoon last week and found his wife out shopping or something else. He went on through the house into the back yard, and there under an apple tree were the little fellows playing. They had a bench and some bottles and tumblers, and were playing 'keeping saloon.' He noticed that they were drinking something out of a pail and that they were actually tipsy. The youngest, who was behind the bar, had a towel tied around his waist, and was setting the drinks up pretty free. Smith walked over and looked in the pail. It was beer, and two of the boys were so drunk that they staggered. A neighbor's boy, a couple of years older, lay asleep behind the tree.

"'My God, boys, you must not drink that,' he said, as he lifted the six-years-old boy from behind the bench.

"'We's playin' s'loon, papa, an' I was a sellin' it just like you,' said the little fellow. Smith poured out the beer, carried the drunken boy home and then took his boys into the house and put them to bed. When his wife came back she found him crying like a child. He came down town that night and sold out his business, and says he will never sell or drink another drop of liquor. His wife told mine about it, and she broke down crying while she told about it."

This is a true story, but the name was not Smith.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A linen dealer in London has the royal order every year for 10 new pairs of sheets at £25 a pair. The linen is of the most exquisitely fine cambric; in the center is the royal coat-of-arms most beautifully embroidered, and the crown equally exquisitely done in the four corners. These sheets are for the state rooms, and are all manufactured near Belfast. Every day the Queen's bed is furnished with linen, and six housemaids perform the task. There are 21 pillows, on which the linen cases are sewn, not buttoned or tied, and these also are changed every day.

"You don't pretend to say that slavery still exists in some parts of the South?"

"Most assuredly I so. I saw many of the slaves not a week ago."

"Well, sir, who are they?"

"The married womem."

"Ah! I see. They are slaves to their husbands, eh?"

"No. Slaves to fashion."—Newman Independent.

"Did you see my picture in the paper today, dear?" inquired a young traveler who had taken quite an interest in politics, as he came into the house the other evening. "Yes, I did—and—and—" here she burst into tears. "Why, what's the matter? Why does it make you cry?" "Why, Jack, I'm so disappointed. If I had known you looked like that I'd never have married you.—Merchant Traveler.

A Fitting Union. "A very appropriate wedding took place in Boston the other day," remarked Staggers; "a Cincinnati man married a Boston girl."

"What was there so appropriate about that?" asked Scroggs.

"A union of pork and beans, you see."—Life.

PICTURESQUE CHINATOWN.

There is no quarter of any city in America more interesting than San Francisco's Chinatown, says a correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser, except that the houses are American in design and structure. Chinatown is in all ways a little China, a bit taken bodily out of the Flowery Kingdom and set down on these shores. The houses are those built by American residents a score of years ago, when the region now occupied by the Chinese was the fashionable district of the city. The Chinese have taken complete possession of it and have converted it into an oriental city. The population is exclusively Chinese; the street scenes, the shops, the manners and the merchandise of every kind, even to the edibles in the market, are those of far Cathay. The fresh fish one sees exposed for sale on stands in the middle of the streets are caught in American waters, but the queer dried fish, the dried ducks and other dissicated meats, the nuts, the confections, the conserves, and in a word, all but the more perishable of food products sold there, are imported from the land of the yellow man's nativity. The first impression made upon the mind of the visitor to Chinatown is that he has suddenly stepped into some oriental city. The next is that there has been very great exaggeration in the published accounts of the squalor, the filth and the vice of the Chinese quarter. There is, in fact, no squalor at all, as we understand that word in New York. These people are well fed and well clothed, and comparatively well housed. The population of the quarter is dense, but not nearly so dense as that of the tenement house districts of New York, and there are nowhere any indications of that poverty which prompts men and women to wear rags and feed upon unwholesome things. The commonest laborer among these people has whole garments, and good ones on his back. I have sought diligently, even in the cellars inhabited by the rag pickers—the show places of the guides—for tatters and patches, but have found none. The Chinese are all kempt and well cared for, and they have an abundance of perfectly wholesome food. Their markets are lavishly and variedly supplied with food products of the best quality and perfect freshness, and any New Yorker might do his marketing there with comfort and confidence. It is perfectly safe to say that there are 100,000 people in New York who are worse fed every day in the year than the poorest of these Chinese are on any day in the year. It is a crowded quarter, but hardly overcrowded, and not by any means a squalid one.

That which observation thus reveals to the sight is confirmed by the sanitary record, for it is a fact of statistics that the mortality is smaller and the number of cases of disease less in Chinatown than in any other quarter of San Faancisco. It is not a filthy quarter. It is cleaner in every way, in the houses and in the streets, than many parts of New York ever are, and that in spite of the fact that the city authorities do nothing for cleanliness in Chinatown. Col. Bee, the Chinese consul, assures me that the city has not spent a dollar in street cleaning in Chinatown for 14 years, and yet the streets are very fairly clean. The work is paid for by voluntary contributions from the Chinese themselves, and it is much better done than similar work is done by our New York contractors in the poorer streets of the metropolis.

As to vice, there is unmistakably a good deal of it in Chinatown, and it is peculiarly unblushing. That which carefully hides itself from sight in American communities calmly presents to observation here and makes its open appeal for custom. I cannot see that it is much worse than American vice, or even that it is more abundant than vice is in the bad streets of every American city. It is only less reticent and less disguised.

Chinatown is much more picturesque and interesting than published accounts would lead one to expect; it is much less squalid and dirty, and much less repulsive in every way. Indeed it is not squalid or repulsive at all, except in a few of the very worst alleys where vice has its particular haunts. At the same time one has only to study Chinatown in order to understand the earnest and sincere conviction of all San Franciscans that some measure of exclusion was necessary to prevent the overrunning of the coast by these people. The ease with which they took possession of the best quarter of the city, making it absolutely their own and compelling the whites to build anew upon the sand-lots, is illustrative of their capacity to swarm wherever they desire and to make themselves complete masters of whatever region they covet. Their habits do not make them good immigrants; that is to say, they are not immigrants who will become Americanized in this or in any future generation. They change the face of the region into which they go, but are themselves unchanging. Should they come in sufficient numbers they would convert California into a new China; but California would work no change whatever in them.

BOYS, READ THIS.

Many people seem to forget that character grows—that it is not something to put on ready-made with womanhood or manhood, but day by day, here a little and there a little, grows with the growth and strengthens with the strength, until, good or bad, it becomes almost a coat of mail. Look at a man of business—prompt, reliable, conscientious, yet clear-headed and energetic. When do you suppose he developed all those admirable qualities? When he was a boy. Let us see how a boy of ten years of age gets up in the morning, works, plays, and studies, and he will tell you just what kind of a man he will make. The boy that is late at breakfast, and late at school, stands a poor chance to be a prompt man. The boy who neglects his duties, be they ever so small and then excuses himself by saying: "I forgot, I don't think," will never be a reliable man; and the boy who finds pleasure in the suffering of weaker things will never be a noble, generous, kind man—a gentleman.—Busy Bee.

PECULIAR

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to and other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One hundred doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad; no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Be sure to get

A Wonderful History.

Dr. R. C. Flower spent more than six years of patient study and exhaustive research, perfecting his great NERVE AND BRAIN FOOD. The success that has attended his efforts more than compensates the time and labor they cost. His scientific Nerve Pills are to-day the most remarkable remedy known in medicine. They are a combination of the finest nutritive elements in the world; they rapidly build up and restore the weakened and shattered brain and nerve power; they do not contain a particle of opium, chloral, bromide, arsenic, strychnine, or other poisonous drug; they are as harmless as the most healthful food, and in the same way nourish and strengthen the brain and nerves. Thousands are living witnesses of the marvellous restorative power of these pills. They are a living evidence of the splendid results that can be achieved by scientific skill, untiring study, and patient labor. 100 doses in every bottle.

The Song of the Shirk.

With fingers that never knew toil,
With nose-tip swollen and red,
A delegate sat in his easy chair,
Eating the laborer's bread;
"Strike—strike—strike!
Nor dare return to your work!"
And still with the swaggering, insolent air,
He sang the "Song of the Shirk!"

"Strike—strike—strike!
Till the children are crying for bread!
Strike—strike—strike!
Till the roof is torn from your head!"
It is Oh! to have a king,
And dwell away over the sea,
Where knights and bosses are still unknown,
If this is liberty!

Shirk—shirk—shirk!
The duty we owe to man;
Shirk—shirk—shirk—
As only a delegate can!
Fine and assessment are due,
Due and assessment and fine,
Such is the stuff on which delegates live,
And swagger and drink and dine!

"Strike—strike—strike!"
The delegate passed this way;
"Strike—strike—strike!"
He orders—you must obey!
And ask not the reason why,
Nor murmur against their decree,
For none must work when they say "No!"
In this country of the free!

Oh! men with children dear,
Oh! men with daughters and wives,
It is not the rich you are starving out,
But your hungry children's lives!
Strike—strike—strike!
To please your masters still,
Ye are slaves to a band of plundering knaves,
Who will bleed ye as long as ye will!

Shirk—shirk—shirk!
The duty you owe to man,
Shirk—shirk—shirk
As only a delegate can!
It is strange that laborers choose
As champions of their cause,
Men who never were known to use
Anything save their jaws.

PRINGLE'S FLAT.

"You will have a beautiful day, my dears," said Mrs. Hope, as she looked admiringly first at her son Dick, who was driving up to the door in his new buggy, then at her daughter-in-law, Mary Hope, whose honeymoon was at its full.

"I am so glad!" said the young wife. "What lovely weather we have had ever since I came here! not at all like what some of our friends predicted when they said we ought to spend our honeymoon in the East.

Dick Hope at that moment sprang out of his buggy lightly, and gallantly extended his hand to his wife.

"Nonsense!" exclaimed Mary Hope, "I am not such a helpless creature that I can't get in myself;" and she stepped lightly into the buggy with a merry laugh.

Mrs. Hope, the elder, gave an approving nod. "It's just as well to let Dick know you can help yourself. These Western men ——"

"Need managing like other men," interrupted her daughter-in-law with another laugh.

Old Mr. Hope, coming down from the stables at that moment, eyed the horse, buggy and harness (Dick had expended seven hundred dollars on that turnout), then stood patting the horse's neck kindly. He was an admirer of fine horses, and his judgment was sought far and wide on all points of horse-flesh. "There's fine mettle here, Dick."

"I know it," said Dick, proudly.

"Cheap at four hundred," said Mr. Hope. "Have you tried her yet?"

"I think she's good for two twenty-one without much of an effort."

"Why, isn't that a fast horse, Dick?" asked his wife, whose curiosity was aroused.

"Just middling," answered her husband. "We have them out here faster than that."

"It is fast," said his father. "We used to think it impossible, but we have got so far on now there's no telling what's in a horse. I like this mare very much. If it was anybody else's I'd ——"

"Come now, what would you give, father?" said Dick, banteringly.

"It's all in the family, so I'm saved a hundred dollars, at least."

"A hundred more wouldn't buy her, father. Just say to anybody that covets my new mare I wouldn't take a cent less than seven hundred dollars. Why she goes like the wind."

"That reminds me, Dick; you'd best take the road round by Drake's."

"And lose a good half hour?" said Dick.

"That's a long way round, father," said the elder Mrs. Hope.

"You take my advice," said her husband. "I mean coming back. It doesn't matter going. If it should blow you will find it safest."

Dick, who was adjusting a strap, looked off east and west, smiled in a satisfied way, and observed, "I don't see any signs of a storm."

"Nor I," said his father; "but no one knows anything about the wind here. I'll never forget the sweep I got twenty years ago coming over Pringle's Flat."

"That is where we are going, isn't it, Dick?" Mrs. Dick Hope looked the least trifle anxious as she turned to her husband.

"Was it so bad, Mr. Hope?"

"Bad! Bad's no name for it. Why, it blew my wagon as far as from here to the bar,—blew the horses off their feet, tore up trees, and lodged me against a rock that saved my life."

"That must have been terrible," said Mary Hope.

"Don't let them frighten you," said Dick, smilingly; "lightning never strikes twice in the same place. I'm all right, you see. The only time I was blown away was when I went East for you. Are we all ready now? Basket in, mother?"

Mrs. Hope nodded gayly, Dick lifted the reins lightly, and away the new buggy with its happy occupants sped over the prairie.

It was early morning. The fingers of the dawn stretched upward, dissolving the shadowy mist that hung over the prairie and the thin line of woodland that lay away off in the west like the fringe on a neatly cut garment. The young wife inhaled the perfumes exhaled from the flowers, filling the atmosphere with rich odors There were lines upon lines of variegated tints above the horizon. Such a sunrise Mary Hope had never looked on except among the mountains. There were tints of crimson, amber and gold; and above all white pillars rolled majestically,—palaces more magnificent and stately than any that the human mind could conceive.

"How grand!" she said, as Dick looked smilingly at her.

"The mind of man cannot measure all its beauties," said Dick, as he settled himself for some "solid enjoyment."

As the red and golden glories stretched above the horizon, a light breeze sprang up, fanning Mary Hope's cheek, caressing her hair lightly, and sighing through the thin selvage of trees which Dick's father had planted along the roadway before his son was born. The god of day wheeled his chariot aloft, radiating as only the summer sun can the rarest tints of amber and crimson and gold, until the purple glories rolling aloft like great billows, gradually arched themselves into the semblance of a gateway, through which Mary Hope caught in fancy, glimpses of the celestial city. She did not speak but sat perfectly quiet, drinking in the beauties of the most beautiful morning Dick Hope had ever witnessed in the West.

"There is Pringle's Flat," said Dick, suddenly pointing ahead.

"Surely we have not come seven miles, Dick?"

"Scarcely. How far is that ahead?"

"It is a mile, Dick?"

Dick laughed loudly. "It's nearer four."

"I don't understand it."

"That's what the smart hunters from the East say when they shoot and miss their game. It's the atmosphere, Mary."

"It's a small place," said his wife as she looked forward to Pringle's Flat, lying a little below them. Beyond there was a ribbon of molten gold, made by the sun's rays falling upon the river. "And that is the river."

"We'll be there in twenty minutes," said Dick Hope, "when I want to introduce you to some of the nicest people in this end of the State."

The people Dick referred to received the young couple in a manner that made Mary Hope's cheek glow with gratification. Her husband was a man universally admired—as fine a specimen of his kind as was ever produced west of Pringle's Flat. The bride, during the two hours they remained in the town, created a ripple of talk. There was something about Dick and his wife that made people turn to look at them. When they drove away a score of friends waved good wishes and tossed kisses after them.

"Now for Dan's Rock," said Dick, as he gave his mare the rein and cast a backward glance at Pringle's Flat. "Pretty, isn't it?"

"Pretty!" said his wife, "why, Dick, it's lovely! See the light on the church windows; it looks as though they were really on fire. The houses are so pretty, too, the streets so wide, and there is such an air of peace and comfort about it! Why, it is like a town that has grown up in a night, it is wonderfully clean and neat—just what a painter would make if he were painting towns to please people."

"I'm glad you like it. That reminds me, do you see that house above the church, to the left?"

"It looks charming—the prettiest house there."

"Glad you like it."

"Why, Dick?"

"It is yours. I bought it before I went East for you. We'll look inside of it when we return, if we have time."

That was Dick Hope's way.

The drive to Dan's Rock occupied an hour. "Now for a trial of your strength," said Dick, as he tied his horse to a tree at the base of the great rock and assisted his wife to the ground where they were to lunch.

"Must I climb up there, Dick?" said Mrs. Hope.

"That's the programme which we came out for to-day. You've heard so much of the view from Dan's Rock that you want to see for yourself. Dou yo know you remind me now of Parthenia fetching water from the spring."

"Parthenia tamed her husband, didn't she, Dick? I'm glad your mother saved me the trouble."

That was a lunch Mary Hope often recalled in after years. Dick persisted in forcing all kinds of dainties upon her, "Irish fashion," as she said afterwards. It was the first time she had ever had him to herself in the glad day with no curious eyes to peer on them, and subjected her lord and master in her turn to such straits that he gladly cried quits as he put his hair out of his eyes and viewed his tormentor.

Then they slowly mounted the massive heap called Dan's Rock. Such a view! A sweep of forty miles in one direction, east, and almost as grand a view to the west.

Dick sat down and handed his wife the glass as he lighted a fresh cigar: "Do you see that hill away off to the left there?"

"Hasn't it a curious shape?"

"There's where the wind comes from. They manufacture it up there."

"What do you mean, Dick?"

"There's a valley back there that extends full forty miles northwest, where you come to prairie land like ours back of Pringle Flat, only there is ten times more of it. The wind rolls down the valley and plays the very deuce with things on the river about that point. Sometimes it rains, and then you'd think the heavens were emptying; all the waters in the valley sweep down below us here, fills the valley where it narrows like the neck of a bottle, and then—look out for trouble. I saw it once; that is all I want to see."

"Is it so awful, Dick?"

"It is really awful, Mary."

"And now it looks like—like the plains of Egypt. I can't conceive of anything disturbing the perfect peace of this beautiful scene. See that cloud away off there, Dick?"

"About the size of a man's hand? I see it."

"It's the only speck in the [illegible]" said his wife.

"It's not like our sky, then," [illegible]k, as he kissed her standing on the very top of Dan's Rock. "Do you know it is time we were moving now?"

"We have only been here a little while."

"It's three hours since we stopped at the foot of Dan's Rock."

"My goodness, Dick!"

"That's what I'm always saying to myself when I think you took me before all the other fellows."

"It can't be."

"Look for yourself," said Dick, holding out his watch.

"It's the grandest day of my life, Dick, I wouldn't have missed it for anything."

He gave her his hand and helped her down the rough places. Once in a while Mary would stop to gather bits of moss and flowers as mementoes of a red-letter day. At least an hour was consumed in the descent. Then they got into the buggy and turned homeward, but not on the road leading past Drake's.

"We want to see all that can be seen, don't we?" said Dick.

"By all means," answered his wife, as she tied her hat loosely and prepared to enjoy the drive home. "But didn't your father tell you to go home by Drake's?"

"The other is the better road."

"You know best, Dick."

Deik's mare went at a slapping pace. "She smells oats," said Dick.

"Look at Pringle's Flat, Dick."

"Pretty, isn't it?"

"There is not a leaf stirring, one would think. It looks so restful over there! It might be a deserted village."

"It does look unusually quiet, now I notice it. But then this sun is terrible. See if you can find our house over there, Mary?"

There was a long silence, then the young wife gleefully pointed out the house, and there was another long silence, which was broken by Mrs. Hope saying suddenly, "What is that curious sound I hear?"

"I hear nothing."

"There! Do you hear it now?"

Dick inclined an ear. They were fairly clear of the rough land at the base of Dan's Rock now, and the mare was trotting rapidly. Suddenly her driver's firm hand brought her upon her haunches. Dick listened intently. His wife was right; her ears were keener than his. There was something in the air.

At that instant Mary's hand clutched his arm convulsively as she cried out, "Oh, Dick, what is that back of us?" She was looking back with horror-stricken eyes and pale lips.

Dick turned. A cloud like a black wall was rushing down on them; it seemed to Dick Hope's eyes as black as ink. An awful fear possessed him. There was a hush, a stillness in the air as chilling as the terrible cloud behind them. "Go 'long!" he exclaimed desperately, cutting the mare fiercely with his whip.

The mare shot out like an arrow, and at that moment another sound smote their ears—a sound that was like the crash of worlds. The mare plunged, reared, then resumed her onward course. Her owner had lost all control over her.

But one thought animated Dick Hope as he clasped his wife with his right arm, while he held fast to the reins with his left hand, shutting his teeth like a vice. That thought was, "Pray God we reach the river bottom!"

The earth groaned under their feet. A sound like the rush and roar and scream of a million locomotives deafened them. Dick Hope instinctively turned and clasped his young wife in his arms. He did not see the mare; he saw nothing but his wife's face, and something struck terror to his heart. His own was ashy gray at that moment as his young wife's, when she turned her last appealing look upon him and moved her lips. His one prayer was that they might die together. It seemed to them that all the sound in the air and earth was condensed and gathered into one awful shriek. Earth and sky were obliterated. Dick Hope felt himself lifted up and flung like a flake through the air.

When he recovered his senses he was lying where he had prayed to be—in the river bottom, with his wife close beside him. The awful storm did not divide them. The tornado, like a raging beast, had simply taken them up in its teeth, so to speak, tossed them aside, and pursued its path. Where they were lying the water was so shoal that it scarcely covered them.

Dick set up and spoke to his wife. She did not answer. Then he put one hand up involuntarily, in a weak, helpless way. There was blood on his face; he could not see; his eyes were full of sand. He struck himself in despair, and, again grasping his wife, said in a hoarse voice, "You are not dead, Mary?"

Whether it was the water from the river he dashed into his face or the gush of tears that came into his eyes, Dick does not know to this day, but suddenly his eyes became clear, and he could see his wife lying with her face next him and the waters washing her long hair over her breast. He lifted her up. He felt her hands, her cheek. Then suddenly he summoned all his remaining strength for one supreme effort, and dragged rather than carried her up to the dry shelving beach under the bluff. Mary Hope slowly opened her eyes and looked at her husband. Then she slowly put her hands up to her face and covered it.

Dick saw the tears coursing down her cheeks. "Don't!—don't! Mary!" he said.

"I can't help it. I am not crying with pain or grief; it's because you are living, because we both are saved."

Dick's strength returned to him. He stood up and looked about him. Until that moment he did not know that he was coatless and without vest or shirt; he was naked. He pressed his eyes with his hands and down on him like one awaking from a dream. He looked at his wife, still sitting with her face covered with her hands; "Mary, we are almost naked. There is nothing on me, and your dress is in ribbons." He looked up and down the river in a helpless way, still pressing a hand to his heart. "I don't see—any sign of—the buggy or horse." Then he cast his glance at the bluff back of them. "Come, let us go up on the bank."

He had to carry her.

"It is a horrible fright, dear Dick. I'll soon get over it," she said, when he set her down gently on the level ground.

"Mary, look over there. Do you see anything? My eyes are so full of sand, so sore, that I can't make it out quite. Everything looks so blurred.'

She did not answer him. It was not because her eyes were not clear. As she looked wonderingly, her hand, that had never relinquished her husband's from the moment he seated her on the prairie, clasped his convulsively. Then she uttered a loud cry.

"I—I expected as much,' said Dick, speaking more to himself than to his wife. "Nothing—nothing man ever made could stand before that storm."

"Oh, Dick," she exclaimed sobbingly, "there is nothing left of the town—not a house. I can only see a heap here and there—something like fallen chimneys, and smoke and fire."

"That's the end of Pringle's Flat, Mary." He looked back over the prairie—back to the fringe of trees that skirted a portion of the road near the base of Dan's Rock but a little while since. He could not recognize the place he had looked on a hundred times. The trees had disappeared, they had been swept from the face of the earth. Then he shaded his eyes with his hand and looked across to where Pringle's Flat had stood in all the pride of a new Western town. Dick Hope suddenly knelt by his wife's side, still holding her hand, saying, "Let us pray."

Among all those who witnessed the awe-inspiring tornado that swept Pringle's Flat until not one stone stood upon another, killing, maiming all living creatures in its path, none have such vivid recollections as Dick Hope and his wife. When they refer to their experience on that terrible day, they speak in a low tone, reverently, as though standing in the presence of the dead.

EYE-SIGHT.

Milton's blindness was the result of overwork and dyspepsia.

One of the most eminent American divines having, for some time, been compelled to forego the pleasures of reading, has spent thousands of dollars in value, and lost years of time, in consequence of getting up several hours before daylight and studying by artificial light. His eyes never got well.

Multitudes of men and women have made their eyes weak for life by too free use of the eye-sight, reading small print and doing fine sewing. In view of these things, it is well to observe the following rules in the use of the eyes:

Avoid all sudden changes between light and darkness.

Never begin to read, or write, or sew, for several minutes after coming from darkness to a bright light.

Never read by twilight, or moonlight, or on a very cloudy day.

Never read or sew directly in front of the light, or window, or door.

It is best to have the light fall from above, obliquely over the left shoulder.

Never sleep so that, on the first waking, the eyes shall open on the light of a window.

Too much light creates a glare and pains and confuses the sight. The moment you are sensible of an effort to distinguish, that moment cease, and take a walk or ride.

As the sky is blue and the earth green, it would seem that the ceiling should be a blueish tinge, and the carpet green, and the walls of a mellow tint.

The moment you are prompted to rub the eyes, that moment cease using them.

If the eye-lids are glued together on waking up, do not forcibly open them, but apply the saliva with the fingers—it is the speediest dilutent in the world—then wash your face and eyes in warm water.

This has been going around for about ten years, and its ownership, we guess, is lost; but it is good enough to go on indefinitely.

DON'T FORGET.

That anxiety is easier to bear than sorrow.

That talent is sometimes hid in napkins, audacity never.

That good brains are often kept in poor-looking vessels.

That the time to bury a hatchet is before blood is found on it.

That mistakes are often bought at a big price and sold at a small one.

That if it were not for emergencies but little progress would be made in the world.

That it is often better to go a good ways round than to take a short cut across lots.

That man may set up a carriage only to find less enjoyment in it than he had in holding the ribbons of his "one hoss shay."

That if we would do more for others while we may, we should have less regrets, when too late, that more had not been done when "it might have been."—Good Housekeeping.

"Wife, this is intolerable. Here is my best Sunday hat all full of pickles. Did I marry you for this?"—New York Morning Journal.

Trust and Try.

Should your trusted friend betray you,
Brother mine,
Deem not all men false I pray you,
Brother mine.
Ever heed this truth divine,
That among life's motley crew
Hearts there are which still are true—
Hearts to feel for you—for you.

Should misfortune overtake you,
Try again;
Bolder let misfortune make you—
Try again.
You should strive not all in vain.
Let your aim be pure and high.
Gentle hope still whispering nigh—
Brother, sit not down and sigh.

CROSSED IN LOVE.

Perhaps the best way to tell whether a heart is really broken or not is an adaption of the rule given for discovering whether mushrooms are edible or poisonous. If they kill you, they are poisonous; if they don't they are fit to eat. A heart that is quite broken does not mend, and it may be added that the possessor of a heart that is nearly broken rarely publishes his grief from the housetop.

A sentimental young man who fancied that he had been "crossed in love," visited an elderly aunt, a plain, practical and eminently sensible woman. He told her his misery, and unquestionably took pleasure in telling it. His aunt greeted him cordially, and asked;

"How do you do, Albert? You look well."

"I wish I could say I was well," was the doleful reply.

"Why, what's the matter of you? Ain't bilious, are you?"

"My pain is here," replied the young man, placing his hand on his heart. "Mine is a broken and bleeding heart."

"What! Heart disease! Why, it don't run in the family. Like enough it's only a cold in your chest. Magnesia is good for heart-burn."

"I'm sorry to say mine is heart-ache.

"Aches, do it? Mebbe red flannels wrung out of hot water might help it. Or you might try a slippery ellum and flaxseed poultice."

"You don't understand, Aunt Jane. My affections have been trifled with, and my love refused and scorned. But I shall not suffer long."

"Nonsense!" said the old lady. I'll fix you up a mess of thoroughwort and sour-dock and peppermint that'll bring you round all right."

"Life holds no hope for me. I have nothing to live for now."

"Hain't, eh? I've heered folks talk like that afore. Live for? Why, if you was to be taken this minute with cramp in the stomach, you'd have us all tearin' off for the doctor as fast as we could go. I'll wager a whole makin' of butter that it won't be six months before that poor bruised and broken heart of yours will be patched up by some girl or other. I ain't worried a bit about you. There's a cord of green ellum wood out in the barnyard that it'd do you a sight of good to split up to kind o' take your mind off yourself. You'll pull through this nonsense that you call misery in less than a month's time."

Six months later his aunt received an invitation to his wedding to a young lady he had known three months.

"I knew how it would be," she says, grimly.—Youth's Companion.

TO SAVE TROUBLE.

While on business in the office of a Park Row printing-house the other day, a thin, tired-looking man entered, and approaching the proprieter said: "I want to have a list printed; suppose you write it down as I tell you."

The proprietor made ready and the man said:

"Yes; I'm sure that I locked the front door. Have you got that?"

"Yes; but I don't understand."

"Never mind; don't interrupt me until I finish. Are you ready?"

"Yes."

"I turned out the light in the bath-room."

"All right; I've got it."

"The kitchen windows are fastened."

"Yes."

"The dog is in the cellar."

"Yes.

"I did not forget to put ashes on the furnace fire."

"Yes."

"The servants are all in."

"Yes."

"The stable door is locked."

"Yes."

"No! the water is not running in the bathroom."

"Yes."

"The kitten is out doors."

"Yes."

"I turned off the drafts of the range."

"Yes."

"No, I do not smell smoke."

"Yes."

"I do not think I hear any one trying to get into the house."

"Yes."

"No, that is not our dog barking; it's the one next door."

"Yes."

"It's not necessary to go down and see if the cellar door is fastened; I know it is."

"Yes."

"That is nobody; only the wind rattling the shutters."

"Yes."

"Well, I think that's about all. You see my wife asks me those questions every blessed night just as I am getting into bed, and if I had a printed list I could show to her, it would save lots of trouble; and, besides that, it injures my lungs to answer them. Have the list as soon as possible."—The Earth.

A poet writes, "I know sweet songs I cannot sing." There are a great many other persons in the same predicament, but unfortunately they insist upon singing them.—Norristown Herald.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 17, 1887.

AN APACHE outbreak is reported in Arizona, and another Indian war is feared.

THE New York hotel keepers have lost their test case, the judge deciding that they have no license to sell liquor to their guests on Sunday.

WILLIAM E. CHANDLER, secretary of the navy under President Arthur, has been elected United States senator from New Hampshire.

EX-SECRETARY MANNING is back from Europe, much improved in health. It is understood that he will spend the summer at Watch Hill, assuming the direction of his New York bank in the fall.

MASTER WORKMAN POWDERLY of the Knights of Labor announces that he will not be a candidate for reëlection, and that he intends to refund the $3500 increase in his salary made the past year.

THE war department has been considering favorably a suggestion that all the captured Confederate flags be returned to their respective states, but the President decides that it cannot be done under existing laws.

TEXAS is to vote on half a dozen constitutional amendments in August, a principal one being an article prohibiting the manufacture or sale of liquor, except for "medical, mechanical, sacramental and scientific purposes."

THE first dinner of the new Butler Club is to be held at the Quincy House, Boston, to morrow afternoon, and the general himself will be on hand to see that the club is not to be a political one in any sense, but the boys will probably try to have a little fun by stirring up the political animals occasionally.

REPUDIATING states are occasionally brought to account. North Carolina has for many years refused to pay the interest on $10,000,000 of bonds issued in 1869, but Judge Bond of the United States circuit court now decides that the state must levy a special tax for its payment, in accordance with the original agreement.

FOR three years a commission of distinguished scientists, acting in accordance with the will of Henry Seybert, a wealthy Philadelphian, has been making a careful and thorough investigation of the various phenomena of Spiritualism, and its report is now being printed. Dr. Slade and other well-known mediums were tested, and the materializations, spirit voices, slate-writing and other tom-foolery are pronounced fraudulent, just as most people have believed them to be.

REV. DR. S. G. BUCKINGHAM of Springfield celebrated last Sunday the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination to the ministry, and the fortieth of his pastorate over the South Congregational church of that city. Such a record is rare, and his pastorate has been not only a long one, but a very successful one as well. The church is also somewhat remarkable in having had only three pastors—Rev. Noah Porter, afterward president of Yale College, Rev. Dr. Buckingham, and Rev. George Selden, his present assistant.

NEW YORK anarchists had a picnic last Sunday at Guttenburg, N. J., and after listening to an incendiary speech by Herr Most pitched upon a reporter who had two small American flags pinned on his coat, beat him unmercifully and pitched him over the fence, and two or three others were treated in a similar way, revolvers and stones were used freely, and there came near being a serious riot. It is a great pity that Most and his gang cannot be shipped to Siberia or some equally delightful and distant spot.

THE Legislature adjourned last night, after a session of 163 days. The House disgraced itself by an attempted salary grab, but the Senate killed it by a strong vote. The constitutional prohibitory amendment failed to pass the House by a close vote, which is to be regretted. Walter Shanly gets $79,495 more on the Hoosac tunnel business; and the soldiers' exemption bill has been signed by the governor. During the session 454 acts and 107 resolves have received the governor's signature, and one resolve was passed over his veto,—that in favor of the Acton veterans.

COMPARISONS are odious, and it is unkind of Frank W. Bird to compare the working habits of our present executive with those of Gov. Andrew, as he does in a recent letter to the Springfield Republican. Gov. Ames invites it, to be sure, by his recent declaration that he attended to his private business in the forenoon, until fatigued, and spent the remainder of the day at the state house for rest. But times are different now, as well as men—and besides, Gov. Ames only wanted the governorship for one term, and of course he cannot be expected to wear himself out in one year.

SEVERAL Grand Army posts in Iowa are reported to have decided not to attend the annual encampment at St. Louis in September because President Cleveland has been invited to be there, in this way giving expression to their bitter disaproval of his pension vetoes. Commander Tuttle of Iowa having said that the soldiers from that state would insult the president if he should attend the parade, Gen Sherman has written a pungent and sensible letter to prominent members of the Grand Army, wherein he pledges his life that Iowa soldiers would not do any such thing. The brave old general says:—

> Mr. Cleveland, the president of the United States by a fair election of all our people, commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the United States, is free to come and go wherever the jurisdiction of this our national government extends. He may visit any fort or ship, where the national flag will be lowered to manifest respect to him and his office, and should a foreign ship fail to do him full honors none will be so quick to resent an insult as the members of the Grand Army of the Republic, who periled life and limb to make that flag respected at home and abroad. The idea of his being insulted, much less endangered, should he be on the grand stand alongside of our commander-in-chief, General Fairfield, when the Grand Army is passing in review, seems to me monstrous. I think I know the Iowa boys too well to believe such a thing possible. Brave men are never ungenerous, and the Iowa soldiers were brave men. I know it of knowledge acquired in battle, and will pledge my life that no Iowa soldier will do so unmanly an act.

A concrete walk has been put in this week along the land of the Boston & Albany railroad on Main street. Cross walks have also been laid to Caryl's, Loomis' and Hatch's blocks, and across the foot of Walnut street. The walk in front of the Nassowanno block has also been recovered.

A Palmer woman recently undertook to construct a pair of pants for her boy. She gots the pants about right,—but the pockets,—those were down about where the tops of the boy's shoes would come, and he says he don't like to go down cellar every time he wants an article stored in his pockets.

June 17th, 1776, Palmer voted to become free and independent, just 17 days before the action of the Continental Congress, and to-day is the 111th anniversary of that step. In order not to let the day pass unnoticed, the town historical committee held a meeting at Forest Lake this afternoon, and listened to a paper presented by H. B. Knox.

At the district court Wednesday, Frank Barnes of Monson was sent to the house of correction for one month, for the larceny of money from the clothes of Charles Upham, the theft being committed the day of the barn burning across the river. John Carlin, also of Monson, a youth with a mania for stealing, was sent to the Lyman school at Westboro, for larceny from the store of Flynt & Sons, about two weeks ago.

James Healey, who was arrested for drunkenness last Friday by Special Policeman Proctor, and had his head badly cut by a blow from the officer's club while resisting arrest, as the latter says, claims that he was not drunk, and the only resistance he made was to tell Proctor he would not go with him. Proctor has asked for an investigation, and the selectmen will give a hearing in the matter at the town house to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The regular quarterly meeting of the Homœopathic Medical Society of Western Massachusetts was held at Cooley's hotel, Springfield, Wednesday. Dr. O. W. Roberts, of Ware, presided, and the bureau of pædology and diseases of the chest reported through its chairman, Dr. N. W. Rand, of Monson. Dr. Sawtelle of Wales read a paper entitled, "Avoidable diseases of children." Dr. Chamberlin objected to little children lying upon the back, especially in some diseases, claiming that lying upon the chest and abdomen is far preferable. Dr. Rand advocated "one-cow's milk," while others preferred "mixed" milk. Dr. Roberts objected to the "trotting," "jogging," etc., of the little ones. Dr. Cushing entered his protest against the usual frequent bathing of little children, giving his experiments with the thermometer before, during and after the bath. He said use less water externally and more internally. After dinner Dr. N. W. Rand read a paper on pleurisy, which was discussed till near the time of closing. Dr. J. K. Warren was chosen as the society's delegate to the meeting of the American institute of homœopathy, June 27 to July 2, at Saratoga.

The Ladies' Missionary Society will give a strawberry and ice cream festival, with supper, in the vestry of the Union church Saturday evening. The entertainment will consist chiefly of music.

THREE RIVERS.

The schools in the village close to-day for the summer vacation.

The bridge over the Quaboag has been replanked, and a greater improvement, the walks are to be widened.

Andrew Dumas, the livery man, has sold his barn to John Kehner. His stock and trade will be sold at auction in about two months.

There will be an illustrated lecture, "The Battle of Gettysburg," by Capt. Clarion H. Kimball, next Wednesday evening, at the Union church. Capt. Kimball was an officer in Borden's sharp shooters, and no doubt will be very interesting as well as instructive. All are cordially invited.

Freight train No. 32, on the N. L. N. R. R. road, due to leave here at 4.30 p. m., derailed two empty cars near the switch south of the station Monday. A wrecking train from Palmer was sent for and the passenger trains were delayed about thirty minutes. Slight damage was done, and there seems to be no cause for the accident, as the track was found to be in perfect condition.

BELCHERTOWN.

Rev. P. W. Lyman preached at Jewett City, Ct., last Sabbath.

The young ladies' guild was quite successful with its entertainment Saturday evening.

Rev. Mr. Read, of Jewett city, Conn., preached in the Congregational Church last Sunday.

Bela P. Searle, a well known and respected farmer, died suddenly of heart disease last Friday.

Mrs. T. R. Green died at her home last week, aged 82 years. She has for several years been feeble. She was the wife of the late T. R. Green, long a merchant of this place. She leaves two daughters, Mrs. Hale, of Philadelphia, and Mrs. J. Burt, of Hardwick.

The series of meetings lately held at Dwight's station have been very successful, and much good work has been done through the efforts of Mr. Parsons. Hereafter preaching services will be held at 2 p. m., Sundays, with Sunday-school immediately following, and a prayer meeting at 7.30.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

E. B. Gates has recently lost a valuable horse by the breaking of a leg.

Children's Sunday was interestingly observed at Grace church with a sermon to the children in the morning, and a concert in the evening.

G. T. Gifford, for the past four years stenographer with Cutler & Co., has left their employ to take a position with the Winona Paper Co. of Holyoke.

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor had their semi-annual election Tuesday night, and the following officers were elected: President, E. H. Cutler; vice president, F. E. Sikes; secretary, Ada Hall; treasurer, M. H. Cooley; delegates to the Saratoga convention, July 5–7, E. W. Wall, Mrs. M. H. Cooley, and Mrs. J. A. Parker. It was voted to instruct the social committee to have an entertainment to provide funds to pay the expenses of the delegates.

The death of Warren Collins last week Thursday removed from our village one of the oldest and most prominent citizens. He was born in Somers, Ct., in 1802, coming to Wilbraham nearly 60 years ago, and very few people can remember when "Grandpa" Collins was not at the station at train time. He was the first agent of the Boston & Albany road at this place, as well as the first postmaster, holding both positions until about ten years ago. He sold the land now owned by the paper mill company to C. W. Chapin and others, and the company was named after him. The funeral was held Monday afternoon at his late residence, and was largely attended.

THORNDIKE.

Last Friday's dance was a success.

The schools close to day with appropriate exercises.

A large party of Bohemians spent Sunday in the village.

William Riley, of the cloth room, was injured by the fall of a ladder a few days ago.

James Loftus is in New York for two weeks, on a combined business and pleasure trip.

Frank K. Foster is to lecture before the local assembly of the K. of L. on Tuesday next.

The Cotton Balls keep a clear record of victories. Last Saturday they downed the Palmer team, 29 to 19.

Edward McKelligott's team backed over the Thorndike Co.'s dump a few days ago; nothing badly injured but his wagon.

George Murdock, now of Malley & Carew, Baltimore, is with us for a week. He will remove his family and settle there.

The B. & A. authorities were in the village Tuesday, looking up the boys who placed a tie across the track some days ago.

Sig. Bosco gave a fair exhibition of sleight-of-hand on his three nights' stay, but gold watches, barrels of flour and free hop failed to appear as billed.

Quite a number of the boys living in one of the private boarding houses were badly poisoned by strawberries last week, due to a careless use of Paris green near the plants.

WALES.

Dea. Eugene Needham lost one of his team horses last week.

E. Shaw and wife return this week from a trip through Kansas.

Summer boarders are arranging for quarters at the hotel during the warm season.

Wm. Harrison has opened ice cream rooms in Needham's block, where he caters to the people.

The strawberry and ice cream gathering last Friday evening in the Baptist vestry was a success, and all had a good time.

Rev. Mr. Hill of Boston will preach for the Baptists again next Sunday. He has been visiting among the people this week.

Our road commissioners have done some good work on our highways, but a large amount of grumbling goes up that the "Dimmick Hill" is not put in better shape at once.

Children's day was observed at the Methodist church last Sunday, Rev. Mr. Gordon preaching to the children in the afternoon. A Sunday school concert was held in the evening, which was largely attended. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers.

If our neighbors in the surrounding towns realized the utility and convenience of our elegant drinking fountain, they might be induced to erect one for their own use and for the traveling public. To show to what extent it is used, a gentleman living near the fountain counted the number of horses, etc., that drank from the fountain one warm day recently, and reports by actual count 220 horses, 12 cows, 14 dogs, to say nothing of the people.

WILBRAHAM.

Chas. Merrick has returned from Florida.

The Willing Workers met Wednesday afternoon, with Miss May Merrick.

Rev. M. S. Howard and Dea. Phineas Knowlton attended the institute at Saratoga.

Rev. G. M. Steele will preach the baccalaureate sermon before the graduating class, Sunday.

Members of the first and second years at the academy will speak for a prize in Fisk Hall this evening.

The Palmer Orchestra will furnish music at the graduating exercises next Thursday, rendering the following programme:

Overture, "Caliph de Bagdad," Phepper
Waltz, "Alone," A. E. Harris
March, "Graduation," Warren
Polka, "What the Dicky Birds Say," B. Moses
Waltz, "Fedora," P. Bucalossi
Mazurka, "Remembrance of Bohemie," C. Fauste
Selection from "La Favorita," Donizetti

The anniversary exercises of Wilbraham Academy commenced this afternoon, the following being the programme:

Friday, June 17, at 7.45 p. m.—Prize declamations by members of first and second years' classes.

At 2 p. m.—Class day exercises of the Senior Class.
At 7.45 p. m.—Musical concert, under the direction of Miss Stebbins.
Thursday, June 23, at 9 a. m.—Exercises of the Graduating Class.
At 7.45 p. m.—Social interview

WEST WARREN.

Dr. V. St. Germain started Thursday for St. Hyacinthe, to attend his father, who is ill. He expects to be gone about eight days.

The old hay scales in front of Faneuf & Co's. on Main street, were removed by order of the selectmen, Wednesday. They had long been an eye-sore, and the looks of the street will be greatly improved.

G. H. Perkins, baggagemaster at the depot, has resigned to accept a position in the freight office at Westfield. He expects to commence his new duties next week. His successor has not yet been appointed.

Beacon Light Lodge of Good Templars give an entertainment in Washington Hall this evening, to consist of comedies, farces, sketches, quartette singing and comic songs by members of the lodge. As this is their first public exhibition, they deserve a good house.

The Methodists are to give a lawn party on Agent J. W. Brown's grounds to-morrow evening. An admission fee will be charged, and strawberries and cream, ice cream and cake will be served. Mr. Brown has made arrangements to have the Warren Cornet Band play during the evening.

Constables Collins and Thompson, with constables Kelley, Smith and Cunningham of Warren, gave D. Peltier a pleasant little call Sunday afternoon. Peltier "set up" the whisky and lager which the officers took with them when they departed. Peltier evidently thought they were getting too neighborly, for he didn't offer to treat with his best cigars, as he did the time before.

BRIMFIELD.

John L. Bacon has bargained for the Center mills property, and intends to rebuild and repair the same.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of the First church have an ice cream and strawberry festival at the vestry Thursday evening.

The high school nine and the resident ex-members of former clubs had a game of base ball on the Wyles lot yesterday afternoon.

The mercantile business in town appears to be improving, as two of our merchants took on new clerks Monday, Elmer W. Agard with J. F. Converse, and Louis S. Brown with J. L. Bacon.

The Ladies' Union of the Second church held an ice cream and strawberry festival at the town hall Thursday evening of last week, and had a very pleasant gathering, though not as large as expected.

There was an extensive forest fire on the farm of Elijah Carpenter, in the westerly part of the town, Tuesday. It began on a lot from which the timber and wood was cut off last winter. From 150 to 200 cords of wood were burned. This is the fourth forest fire in town this season.

Children's Sunday was observed by both of the churches. At the First church the usual preaching service and the Sunday-school were omitted, and a special service appropriate to the day substituted. The floral decorations were numerous and beautiful. At the Second church the floral decorations were many and tasteful. The exercises of the Sunday-school were appropriate to the day.

The graduating exercises of the Hitchcock Free High School will be held at 2 o'clock p. m. next Friday, with the following programme, and music by the Springfield Orchestral Club:

WARREN.

A Chinese laundry will probably locate in town soon.

There are 849 children of school age in town, 100 more than last year.

Children's Sunday will be observed at the Congregational church next Sabbath.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society met with Mrs. Day Wednesday afternoon.

The high school graduating exercises will take place June 27th, in the town hall.

Mr. Moore has moved into the old hotel, and will have his fish market in the east part of it.

Invitations for the wedding of Miss Skerry and Mr. Hosley are out for next week Wednesday.

All the schools will close next week except the high school, which will continue two weeks longer.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Chapin of Springfield have been spending a few days in town the past week.

The Universalists are trying to raise funds for a new pipe organ for their church and are meeting with good success.

Children's Sunday was observed at the Universalist and Methodist churches last Sabbath. All the exercises were very interesting.

The Warren Aqueduct Company has chosen these officers: Clerk and treasurer, Charles H. Comins; directors, John G. Leach, W. C. Gage and Silas Hobbs.

The Herald calls for the "Mutual Improvement Society," and it echoes the wishes of a large number of our people, as there are many places yet to be reclaimed.

The workmen employed in the Blake steam pump works have formed an association for their mutual benefit. President, Mr. Goodhue; vice president, Mr. Kelley; secretary, Mr. Gates; treasurer, Mr. Campbell.

John Daly, Warren's well-known and genial Irishman, died at the Washington home in Boston last Friday, and was buried from the Catholic church in this place Monday. He was taken to the home Wednesday of last week, and on going to the window Friday for fresh air, fell out and down two stories, living only three hours afterward.

The marriage of Miss Lillian Powers and Frank W. Barnes of Ware took place Wednesday morning at her father's residence, none but the near family friends being present. They were married under a bell of daises. The presents were very handsome and large in number. The choir of the Congregational church of which she is a member gave a handsome picture. The happy pair take a trip to the Berkshire hills with their private carriage, and will make their home in Warren for the present.

MONSON.

The public schools close this week.

W. C. Felton is home from Tuft's College.

The Shamrocks were defeated at Wales last Saturday, 15 to 11.

Dr. Bancroft has moved into Mark Noble's tenement on High street.

John McBride has leased Curley's barn, and will carry on the livery business.

George Hodge and Fred Fay have returned from their outing in the Adirondacks.

Mrs. E. H. Graves and daughter are visiting friends in Easthampton and vicinity.

Julius H. Graves has the contract for building a new barn for Needham Thompson.

The examination of candidates for admission to the Academy will be held next Monday.

D.W. Letters offers his dwelling house on Main street for sale, and will leave Monson July 1st.

Charles Stebbins is having a new house built. George W. Lyman, of Palmer, is doing the work.

George L. Topliff and wife, of Pomona, Cal., intend visiting in this locality the latter part of July.

Miss Grace Aldrich sailed for Europe Wednesday, accompanied by her sister, Mrs. J. G. Moore.

G. H. Newton and Carlos M. Gage have been appointed commissioners in the estate of William Whiting.

Rev. Mr. Maxham will supply the pulpit of the Universalist Church next Sabbath, morning and evening.

Carloads of wool for our manufacturers are arriving daily, and prospects are fair in the market for sales of woolen goods.

The academy seniors made it very pleasant for all who attended their ice cream and cake social last Friday evening, and netted about $20.

Candy dates, at the confectionery stores in abundance, and candidates at the churches are in bountiful supply, willing and anxious to be heard.

A. J. Glazier has sold his Palmer and Monson stage route to Mulcahy Bros., of Brookfield, who will have headquarters at Mark Noble's old livery stand.

The exercises at the academy about the 29th of June will probably furnish work enough for our citizens, without any extra demonstration on the Fourth of July.

The children of the Universalist Sunday school will give a short entertainment in Central Hall next Tuesday evening, commencing at 8 o'clock. Admission free. Ice cream and strawberries will be served.

Two turtles, measuring 15 inches in length, were caught near the North village pond last Monday, and Caterer Bugbee furnished genuine turtle soup, which was heartily appreciated by the partakers thereof.

P. B. Moore, wife and daughter, of Pomona, Cal., are visiting friends in town. Mr. Moore report svery successful business during his two and a half years' stop in Pomona, and the stories he relates of the sudden growth of the towns and cities surprises the Yankee listeners, who can hardly believe that a town of 3000 inhabitants will rise up in two or three years.

DEATH OF CHARLES D. KEEP.

Charles D. Keep, a former Monson boy, died at Elberon, N. J., last week Thursday. Although born in Monson, his early life was spent in New York, where he commenced his journalistic career at Rochester, going to New York city in 1871 and obtaining employment on the Times. He did some very effective work for the newspaper in the Greeley campaign, and when, soon after, he was promoted to the Wall street department, he did some effective work for himself. It is said that his brief career of about six months in Wall street, as representative of the Times, netted him $3,000. About ten years ago he founded the Wall Street Daily News, a little four-page two-cent paper. His delight was to strike out from the shoulder, and he never seemed to care whom he hit. Some of his attacks upon individuals and corporations resulted in litigation which he seemed to regard as a good thing. His attacks upon the financial standing of the Manhattan Elevated railroad company, the Western Union Telegraph, and other corporations in which Messrs. Gould, Sage and Field are interested, caused him a good deal of trouble in the courts. His latest venture was in the patent medicine business. He professed to have discovered somewhere down the Jersey coast a valuable remedy for colds. He bought it out last winter and spent thousands of dollars advertising it. His death was due to rheumatism, which reached his heart. He left a host of friends, and a fortune that is generally estimated at about $500,000.

MR. BYINGTON'S MARRIAGE.

The announcement that Rev. Mr. Byington had been married at Worcester, Tuesday, was a surprise to most Monson people, who had not looked for the event, so soon at least. The Worcester Telegram gives this account of the ceremony: "Rev. E. H. Byington, formerly of Monson, and Miss Louise J. Workman, daughter of the late Dr. William Workman, were married last evening at the residence of Rev. E. Cutler, D. D., 49 Chatham street. The arrangements for the happy occasion were in excellent taste and the number of invitations was quite limited. The house was beautifully decorated with palms and festoons of tennessemus and mountain laurel. The corners of the mantel in the parlor were decorated with Jacqueminot and Marechal Neil roses. On the book-case was a basket of cut flowers and in the hall was a similar basket. The ceremony was performed under a bower of tropical plants festooned with tennessemus and hydrangeas, Dr. Cutler officiating, assisted by Rev. W. V. W. Davis, pastor of Union church. Among the guests were Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Workman, Mrs. Elizabeth W. McPherson, Mrs. A. George Bullock, Hon. and Mrs. F. H. Dewey, Mr. George T. Dewey, Mr. John C. Dewey, Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Moen, Philip W. Moen, Mrs. W. V. W. Davis, Miss Ava Williams, the Misses Morse, Mrs. A. G. Coes, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin H. Hall of Cambridge, Mrs. Henry C. Rice and Miss Emma Allen. Immediately after the ceremony a wedding repast was served by Caterer Zahonyi, and Mr. and Mrs. Byington received the congratulations of their friends until 9 o'clock, when they took a carriage for the Union station and went to Boston on the 9.24 express. They will spend considerable time in travel, and have not yet decided on their future permanent place of residence."

On the petition of the Otis company for an abatement of tax, over which there has been such lengthy hearings, the commissioners unanimously decided against granting any abatement.

There is to be a strawberry festival at the church at Ware Center next Monday evening. The people at the Center are a social set, and are bountiful providers, so a good time is insured.

Rev. J. C. Brooks of Christ church, Springfield, will hold Episcopal services in Trinity mission room, Sandford's block, this evening at 7. 30 o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

The contract with the party who is putting in service pipes is to close in about a week. If any are contemplating taking the water this season, it is desirable that they should make application at once.

The Central Massachusetts Railroad Company is to be a patron of the Ware water works to the amount of $500 per year. The water is being drawn off from the reservoir to give it a thorough cleaning.

Marsh Brothers have their store nicely repaired, so that it is much better than before the fire, and with a new stock of goods are in excellent shape to do business. As an indication of one branch, they now have the contract to do over 20,000 feet of tin roofing.

William E. Canterbury was accidentally drowned at West Ware, Tuesday evening. While boating with a young lady the boat commenced to leak, when he jumped out, and being unable to swim was drowned. The cries of the young lady were heard and she was rescued from her perilous situation.

We have been shown a letter this week written by Mrs. Nancy Green of East Barnard, Vt., who is 90 years of age. It is written in a neat and legible hand, without the aid or spectacles. She has just completed a bed quilt having 3456 pieces. She is a sister of Capt. Benj. Tupper and aunt to Mrs. B. F. Angel, of this place.

Rev. James Boyle is making business lively in putting the property of St. William's church in order. The house on Bank street recently bought of Mr. Owen is being got ready for occupancy as fast as possible, and extensive improvements have been made about the church and cemetery, building fences, planting trees and putting in the water works for church and cemetery use.

There was a panic in the New York coffee market Monday, resulting in three failures, one of them for more than a million dollars; and Chicago was convulsed Tuesday by the collapse of a big wheat deal, which carried down a dozen or more houses and caused one of the wildest panics the city has seen.

The Springfield police made a mistake at the celebration of the 250th anniversary of that city when they arrested S. A. Pierce, a Providence merchant, and Robt. Bath of Worcester, under the impression that they were rogues. Bath was awarded $1000 damages some time ago, and now Pierce has been awarded $2000.

Jasper Straumbach, a young German arrested at Salem, Ill., has confessed to committing the mysterous murder at Rahway, N. J., three months ago. He worked on a farm at Milton, N. J., at that time.

Tuesday was the 110th anniversary of the adoption of the stars and stripes as the national emblem.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, June 15th, 1887.

On Thursday afternoon the Senate enacted the Sunday bill. That completed its passage of both branches, and about the middle of the afternoon it was announced that the governor had signed it.

Both branches suspended the rules to admit the petition of Durell O. Pease, who is only 20½ years of age, to be allowed to sign legal contracts. He has patented important improvements in spinning machinery, and wishes to push his inventions.

The House debated the Shanley resolve Thursday forenoon, and finally engrossed it 96 to 63. Both the Pittsfield members, Gamwell and Crosby, supported it. Yet Pittsfield, in Samuel W. Bowerman, once defeated it.

The illiterate minors bill was engrossed by the House Friday after being amended by striking out the provisions that the fine for employing illiterate minors might be recovered in an action of tort.

A large majority of the House was against the secret ballot bill. The adverse report on making election day a legal holiday has been accepted.

Friday's session of the Senate was given up to routine matters which have been noted already,—such as were worth it.

The House spent most of its time on the West End street railway bill for Boston,—a measure said to involve more money than any that was ever before at the state house, the Hoosac tunnel not excepted. It was put through the House just as it came from the Senate, though strong efforts were made to change it. Some of the proposed changes would doubtless have been made if it could have been done without sending the bill back to the Senate. But one of its friends said that if it ever went back there, the House would never see it again. So they stuck together, voted down all amendments and passed the bill to be engrossed.

It looks as if Athol would be allowed to manufacture water gas, for the House has shown itself very favorable to the bill. The coal gas men tried to kill it by repeating the old argument of the danger from water gas, but the House is getting wonted to the argument, and it does not count for as much as formerly,—especially since nine-tenths of all the gas used in New York is water gas. Athol and Cottage City are the only places in Massachusetts where water gas is made.

A hard-pushed effort to finish business this week has led to some action for which the Legislature will probably be sorry when it gets home and thinks of it soberly, every man for himself. Particularly is this true of the vote for the $850 salary bill in the House Tuesday. People generally may say that the Republican majority of the Legislature is responsible, and hence a change to the Democrats would be better. But the trouble with that argument is that the Democrats, as a class, are worse grabbers than the Republicans. I am not saying that the members are not worth $850. That is not my criticism. But they have no right to disgrace the state in their headlong, indecent greed to vote the money into their own pockets. Mr. Fales of Milford led the House in a motion I never heard made before, and which, for the credit of the state, ought never to be made again. After the House had engrossed the bill by 101 to 100, he moved to reconsider, hoping the motion would not prevail. He did not wish to give time for sober second thought. By 129 to 42 the House voted to suspend the rule requiring his motion to go into Wednesday's calendar. Then by a tremendous shout they refused to reconsider. It was a shameful scene, unworthy the meanest legislator that ever sat under the dome.

Gov. Ames has vetoed the bill to pay bounties to the Acton veterans (who have already had $800 apiece as bounty) from the state treasury, on the ground that it is unconstitutional.

The Senate has finally rejected the House bill to forbid liquor dealers to sit on juries in liquor trials.

The Senate recieved strong protests Tuesday against the soldiers' exemption bill, but engrossed it 21 to 9 thus:

YEAS: Cook, Dwyer, Fernald, Gleason of Plymouth, Glines, Jefts, Jenkins, Jones of Essex, Jordan, Kimball, Morse, O'Sullivan, Perkins, Pillsbury, Reed, Roads, Sayles, Shea, Slattery, Towne, Welch—21. Paired, Jones of Berkshire, Milliken, Howard.

NAYS: Clark, Currier, Fletcher, Forbes, Gleason of Worcester, Gould, Keith of Plymouth, Marble, Sleeper—9. Paired, Phillips, Wilbur, Alger.

On Tuesday came the second trial to pass the prohibitory amendent. No debate occurred and the vote was 135 yes to 73 no, against 139 yes and 74 no last week. Not a vote changed sides. Some new records were made. Some members present then were not present this week. But the total was worse for the amendent than before.

The Senate bill to prevent legislative corruption and to regulate the practices of parliamentry agents, which was the outcome of the Beverly investigation, was referred by the House Tuesday to the next Legislature, after a very short debate in which it was maintained that it would be wholly impracticable.

Gov. Ames heard on Tuesday the remonstrances against the West End land bill, and then signed it early Wednesday morning, before going to the Fall River school house dedication.

The bill to equalize taxation on personal property, offered by Mr. Walker of Worcester, has been referred to the next Legislature.

The bill to prevent the employment of illiterate minors passed the Senate to-day, but changed so as to read "minors who cannot read or write the English language."

Wednesday afternoon the Senate reached the resolve in favor of Walter Shanley. It was opposed by Senators Marble of Worcester and Reed of Bristol, and supported by Senator Dwyer of Suffolk. The vote in its favor was 21 to 9 with four pairs.

The soldiers' exemption bill was enacted in both branches Wednesday without opposition.

By a large vote the Senate rejected the House bill to raise from $100 to $500 the damages recoverable for failure to deliver telegraphic messages promptly. It was admitted that the public had a grievance, but the efficiency of the remedy was doubted.

The Senate treasury committee reported that the House salary bill ought not to pass, and the public service committee made the same report on the bill to raise the governor's salary from $5000 to $10,000.

A long debate on the Senate prison labor bill resulted in its engrossment by the House, though it is said that it will add $500,000 to the state tax this year for the purchase of new machinery.

The finance committee reported favorably on the bill for an extension of the state house by taking the property north of Mt. Vernon street. They leave the loan of two million dollars in the bill, but refer the details of the plan to a commission to report to the next Legislature. LANDON.

Illionois now has a law which prohibts the ownership of land in that state by aliens. California, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, New York and Connecticut have such laws.

A meteoric stone weighing at least two tons fell near St. Joseph, Indianna, the other day, burying itself fifteen feet in the ground.

A boot and shoe factory at Nashville, Tenn., the only one in the South, has failed.

Bees were never busier than the Broadhurst Bros., (Morse's Shoe Store) Springfield, have been for the past few months. These fellows are intensely alive to the interests of their constant stream of customers. They are always on the alert for bargains and generous enough to divide the profits with their customers. If you haven't been used to buying your shoes there you had better try them at once and obtain a visible proof of their generosity.

What is a cold in the head? Medical authorities say it is due to atmospheric germs, uneven clothing of the body, rapid cooling when in a perspiration, etc. The important point is, that a cold in the head is a genuine rhinitis, and inflammation of the lining membrane of the nose, which, when unchecked, is certain to produce a catarrhal condition—for catarrh is essentially a "cold" which nature is no longer able to "resolve" or throw off. Ely's Cream Balm has proved its superiority, and sufferers from cold in the head should resort to it before that common ailment becomes seated and ends in obstinate catarrh.

Use Pond's Extract for every Pain or Soreness; it stops bleeding from the lung, nose, mouth, stomach, etc. Avoid cheap and worthless substitutes.

People visiting Springfield will find the Half dime Lunch Rooms, 251 and 253 Main street, the place to get their meals. The location is but a short distance from the depot, the service is good and the prices are the lowest in the city. The variety is large and 5 cents each is charged for all dishes served. 3w10

For a time my life was despaired of. My trouble was with the Kidneys, Liver and Bladder—also Constipation. Finally I used Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and in my opinion it saved my life. I make this statement to save those who suffer as I did.—A. J. Gifford, Lowell, Mass. Druggists; $1. Send 2-cent stamp to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y., for his book on Kidney, Liver and Blood disorders. Mention this paper. 4w11

Some Things Learned by Experience,

That a tablespoonful of salt thrown on a coal fire that is low, will cause it to burn up quickly. That you can clean oil cloth with milk and water; while soap and brush will ruin it. That the skin of a boiled egg is the best remedy you can apply to a boil. That you can't cure Rheumatism or Neuralgia without taking Menard's Rheumatic Bullets. That you can buy them of LeGro & Lynde for $1.00 per bottle. eow7

The Verdict Unanimous.

W. D. Sult, Druggist, Bippus, Ind., testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half dollar a bottle. Sold by LeGro & Lyne, Palmer, and C. E. Blood, Ware. 2

Excitement in Texas.

Great excitement has been caused in the vicinity of Paris, Tex., by the remarkable recovery of Mr. J. E. Corley, who was so helpless he could not turn in bed, or raise his head; everybody said he was dying of Consumption. A trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery was sent him. Finding relief, he bought a large bottle and a box of Dr. King's New Life Pills; by the time he had taken two boxes of Pills and two bottles of the Discovery, he was well and had gained in flesh thirty-six pounds. The Trial Bottles of the Great Discovery for Consumption free at LeGro & Lynde, Palmer, and C. E. Blood, Ware. 2

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

The Best Salve in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt, Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Legro & Lynde, Palmer, and C. E. Blood, Ware. 1y29

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhoea, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the perscription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25c. a bottle. 1y21

ENJOY LIFE.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens and oceans, and thousands of means of enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health; but how often do the majority of people feel like giving up disheartened, discouraged and worn out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily find satisfactory proof, that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint are the direct causes of seventy-five per cent of such maladies as billousness, Indigestion, sick headache, costiveness, nervous prostration, dizziness of the head, palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10c. Try it. 1y46eow

MORTGAGEE'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

By virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by Eli Gardner of Wales, Hampden County and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to the Wales Savings Bank of said Wales, dated December 5th, 1885, and recorded in the Registry of Deeds, for the County of Hampden, Book 404, Page 92, will be sold at public auction on the premises, on Thursday, the 23d day of June, 1887, at one o'clock p. m. All and singularly the premises conveyed by said mortgagee deed, namely: A certain tract of land situated partly in Wales and partly in Brimfield, in said county, containing 70 acres and twenty-nine rods more or less, with buildings thereon, bounded as follows, to-wit: Beginning at a point in the west line of the road leading from the house formerly owned by Horace Gardner, to the house formerly owned and occupied by me in said Wales, where said line of said road is intersected by the north line of an old road leading westerly; thence westerly in the said north line of said old road to the east line of land formerly owned by Horace Gardner, which was formerly owned by Humphrey Gardner; thence north 140 rods to a corner of land now or formerly owned by Alexander Harwood in said Brimfield; then E. 12°, S. 47½ rods; then N. 34½°, W. 28 rods and 5 links; thence E. 11½°, S. 31½ rods; then N. 11½ rods; then E. 17°, S. 16 rods and 5 links; thence S. 9½° W. 138 rods; thence W. 17°, S. 23 rods to the east line of road herein first mentioned; thence northwesterly across said road to the place of beginning, meaning to convey all of the premises that were conveyed to me by a deed dated April 23d, 1854, from Horace Gardner, and recorded with Hampden County Deeds, Book 180, folio 29; Also two other tracts adjoining the above and being a part of my farm and containing 46 acres, partly in Wales and partly in Brimfield, being the said tract deeded to me by Wm. H. Gardner, May 9th, 1844, recorded in Book 143, Folio 375, meaning to deed all land that I now own in said Wales and Brimfield, and all that is included in the two deeds above referred to, excepting what I have heretofore conveyed to other parties (it being) a small tract of wood land, the tract referred to as sold was conveyed to G. Noyes.

White Rose.

The red rose whispers of passion,
And the white rose breathes of love;
Oh, the red rose is a falcon,
And the white rose is a dove.

But I send you a cream-white rosebud
With a flush on its petal tips;
For the love that is purest and sweetest
Has a kiss of desire on the lips.

FAMILIAR MAXIMS.

Wise saws are the literature of reason; the condensed thought of the public mind; the wisdom of many the wit of one. To the ancients they were both philosophy and religion, and even among moderns they go unchanged though many of them are palpably false. Such is their currency and force that they serve to parry a thrust or clinch an argument, and thrice armed is he who hath whole flights of them at his command.

The following, says the Philadelphia Times, were picked up at random and arranged alphabetically under the general head of "wise-saws:"

A little folly now and then is relished by the best of men.
A game is never won until it's ended.
A fair exchange is no robbery.
A burnt child avoids the fire.
A shoe-maker sticks to his last.
A bad oath is better broken than kept.
A stitch in time saves nine.
A short horse is soon curried.
A rolling stone gathers no moss.
A setting hen never grows fat.
A watched pot never boils.
A miss is as good as a mile.
A bird in hand is worth two in the bush.
A smooth sea never makes skillful mariners.
A guilty conscience needs no accuser.
A drowning man catches at straws.
A new broom sweeps clean.
A fool for luck.
A fool and his money are soon parted.
A barking dog seldom bites.
A friend in need is a friend indeed.
A quiet tongue makes a wise head.
An idle brain is the devil's workshop.
An honest man is the noblest work of God.
An honest confession is good for the soul.
An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.
All is fish that comes to my net.
All is not gold that glitters.
All is well that ends well.
All is fair in love and war.
As many opinions as people.
As the twig is bent the tree's inclined.
Artists are born, not made.
Accidents will happen in the best of families.
Always kick the dog that's under.
An old fox is not easy caught.
A cheerful spirit sweetens toil.
Better wear out than rust out.
Better let well enough alone.
Better late than never.
Better the day better the deed.
Better do it than wish it done.
Better have two cooks than one doctor.
Better to have the good will even of a dog.
Better to have two strings to one bow.
Better still to have two beaus.
Be sure of a new friend before cutting an old one.
Be sure you are right, then go ahead.
Be sure your sin will find you out.
Be just before you are generous.
Begin on the best and you'll always have the best.
Bygones have no right to be heard.
Blessings brighten as they take their flight.
Birds of a feather flock together.
Biters are often bitten.
Beauty is often skin deep.
Beauty is a blossom.
Beauty unadorned is adorned the most.
Brevity is the soul of wit.
Birth is much, breeding more.
Brag is a good dog, hold-fast is better.
Borrowed garments never fit well.
Bought wit is the best wit.
Circumstances alter cases.
Corporations have no souls.
Curses, like chickens, go home to roost.
Charity should begin at home.
Coming events cast their shadows before.
Confessing a fault half amends it.
Can't get blood out of a turnip.
Charity covers a multitude of sins.
Discontent is a charming lap-dog.
Discretion is the better part of valor.
Dead men's shoes fit well.
Don't count your chickens before they're hatched.
Don't cross a bridge until you come to it.
Don't meet trouble half-way.
Don't cook a hare before you have caught it.
Don't swap a horse while crossing a stream.
Dropping water wears the rock.
Domestic infelicity is a thorn in the flesh.
Death loves a shining mark.
Dreams go by contraries.
Every stream finds its own channel.
Every man is his own doctor.
Every man is supposed to know his own business best.
Every trade has its tricks.
Every dog has his day.
Every man has his weak point.
Every tub should stand on its own bottom.
Eager ears can hear anything.
Empty wagons make the most noise.
Evil communicationss corrupt good manners.
Facts are stubborn things.
Fate has no feeling.
Fools' names and fools' faces oft appear in public places.
Froth is sure to come to the surface.
Good goods come in small packages.
Greed kills the goose that lays the golden egg.
Guess-work is as good as any if it hits.
Good blood tells.
Harder the storm the sooner over.
Human nature semper item.
Hunger is good sauce.
He laughs best who laughs last.
He is best served who serves himself.
Heaven helps those who help themselves.
Honesty is the best policy.
Honesty is its own reward.
It takes two to quarrel.
It takes a smart man to be a fool.
It makes all the difference as to whose ox is gored.
It makes all the difference as to which end of a horn comes foremost.
It all goes in one's lifetime.
It is never too late to mend.
If the shoe fits, wear it.
If wishes were horses beggars might ride.
Ill news travels fast.
Jack of all trades, master of none.

A STRAY ARROW.

Thirty years ago or more Mr. Spurgeon was invited to preach in the vast Crystal Palace at Sydenham. Would his voice fill the immense area? Resolving to test it, he went in the morning to the palace, and, thinking for a passage of scripture to repeat, this, as he reached the stage, came into his mind. "It is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." Pronouncing the words he felt sure that he would be easily heard, and then repeated the verse in a softer tone. More than a quarter of a century later Mr. Spurgeon's brother, who is also a pastor, was called to the bedside of a man, an artisan, who was near his end. "Are you ready?" asked the pastor. "Oh, yes," answered the dying man with assurance. "Can you tell me how you obtained the salvation of your soul?"—"It is very simple," said the artisan, his face radiant with joy. "I am a plumber by trade. Some years ago I was working under the dome of the Crystal Palace, and thought myself entirely alone. I was without God and without hope. All at once I heard a voice coming from heaven which said, 'It is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners.' By the meaning of these words I was convinced of sin, Jesus Christ appeared to me as my Saviour, I accepted him in my heart at the same moment, and I have served him ever since." God honors his Word. Suppose Mr. Spurgeon had used a secular sentence to try his voice. What surprises await the faithful when results are known.—Presbyterian.

BUTTONS AND JEWELRY FROM BLOOD.

The country is learning to utilize waste. Making buttons of blood is in this direction. There is a large factory in Bridgeport, near Chicago, employing about one hundred men, boys and girls, in which waste animal blood is converted into buttons. The same firm has another large factory elsewhere. A man named Hirsh was the first to introduce the business into this country, some years ago. He lost $16,000 the first six months, but he stuck to it and is now immensely wealthy. There are a number of similar factories in England. From 8000 to 10,000 gallons of blood are used in the Bridgeport factory every day. Nothing but fresh beef blood is used. It is said that pigs' blood is just as good, but it is too much trouble to collect and save it. Considerable of the blood evaporates during the process of drying but what remains is pure albumen. Some of it is light in color and some dark, according to the chemical treatment given it. These thin sheets of dried blood are then broken up and are ready to be worked into various shapes and sizes. Large quantities of the blood sheets are used by cloth manufacturers for "setting" the color in calico goods. Not only are buttons made from blood in this way, but tons of earrings, breast pins, belt clasps, combs and trinkets are made annually there from blood. It is a queer, odoriferous business, but a paying one.—Lewiston Journal.

WHAT AN OLD MAN NOTICED.

I have noticed that all men are honest when well watched.

I have noticed that purses will hold pennies as well as pounds.

I have noticed that in order to be a reasonable creature, it is necessary at times to be downright mad.

I have noticed that some men are so honest that necessity compels them to be dishonest in the end.

I have noticed that silks, broadcloths and jewels are often bought with other people's money.

I have noticed that whatever is is right, with a few exceptions—the left eye, the left leg and the left side of a plum pudding.

I have noticed that the prayer of a selfish man is "Forgive us our debts," while he makes everybody that owes him pay to the utmost farthing.

I have noticed that money is the fool's wisdom, the knave's reputation, the poor man's desire, the covetous man's ambition, and the idol of all.

I have noticed that he who thinks every man a rogue is very certain to see one when he shaves himself, and he ought, in mercy to his neighbor, to surrender the rascal to justice.

THE WISDOM OF FOLLY.

Poverty raises a large family.

The porcupine never sticks his quill in himself.

The minister never says grace when he dines alone.

The girl who marries for money often gets a fool thrown in.

When a young man is walking with his girl he forgets all the short cuts.

A dog wags its tail when it is pleased; a cat shakes hers when she is angry.

A man who is always in a hurry leaves a good many things behind him.

The boy who gets in the habit of saying his prayers in bed soon forgets them altogether.

Real poverty is never eloquent; the most plausible beggar is always the greatest impostor.

Much of the so-called poverty of the present day seems to be written in gasmeter.

The man who has nothing to lose and everything to gain is very apt to be a socialist.

The milkman never cries over his spilt milk because he knows it is nearly all water.

A woman will never put anything in her pocket that she can hold in her mouth.—Judge.

Young Man (to sexton at church door)—Isn't the sermon nearly done?"

Sexton—"About an hour yet. He is only on his "Lastly."

Young Man—"Will it take him an hour to get through his "Lastly?"

Sexton—"No; but there's the "One word more and I am done," and the "Finally," and the "In conclusion" to come yet. Don't get impatient, young man! You're girl won't spoil!"—Puck.

WELSH WISDOM.

Three things of short continuance—a lady's love, a chip fire and a brook flood.

Three things that ought never to be from home—the cat, the chimney and the housewife.

Three essentials to a false story teller—a good memory, a bold face and fools for an audience.

Three things that are as good as the best—brown bread in famine, well water in thirst and a gray coat in cold.

Three things that are seen in a peacock—the garb of an angel, the walk of a thief and voice of the devil.

Three things it is unwise to boast of—the flavor of thy ale, the beauty of thy wife and the contents of thy purse.

Three things from the grave—"Thou knowest what I was; thou seest what I am; remember what thou art to be."

Three things that never become rusty—the money of the benevolent, the shoes of the butcher's horse and a woman's tongue.

Three things not easily done—to allay thirst with fire, to dry wet with water, and to please all in everything that is done.

Three things as good as their better—dirty water to extinguish fire, an ugly wife to a blind man, and a wooden sword to a coward.

A STAR-ROUTE MAIL.

In one of the gulches stood the ruins of a cabin and a "star-route" refuge. No possible need had existed for a mail-carriage across here, but a few years before my date contractors had found it profitable to institute the route; and a sack holding a half dozen letters and perhaps a few copies of The Congressional Globe, was carried back and forth on horseback. One man brought it 150 miles or so from Missouri and delivered it here in the wild woods to a second man, who carried it down to Lake Pend'd'Oreille, rowed forty miles across the fir-circled water, and handed it over to a rider at the western end. This middle man was utterly alone. Not a single soul lived on his route. In the winter he traveled on snow-shoes, for months together saw nobody but the carrier who brought him his pouch at each end, and could tell you stories of adventures with wolves and bears, and of wonderful visions of elks, sheep and mountain goats. Robinson Crusoe led a less secluded life.—The American Magazine for June.

A countryman stopped in front of a store on Fourteenth street, attracted by a line of baby carriages.

"How much might one of them be?" he said to a clerk.

"The cheapest is $15, sir."

"Fifteen dollars!" he exclaimed. "Why, great Scott, mister, it only cost me $2 to git married."—New York Sun

Not Amphibious.—Miss Mulcahey—"Sure, Mister O'Rafferty, it's disappointed that we were last night that yez didn't call at our house as yez promised." Mr. O'Rafferty—"Sure, Miss Mulcahey, it's sorry that I am, but I couldn't come. I can't be in two places at once. It's not amphibious that I am."Texas Siftings.

The effect of prohibition in Iowa is that signs appear on numerous suspicious looking shanties in the back country reading as follows: "Druck Sto," "Drog Staer," "Drugg Stower," etc. The injury done the English language alone by prohibition will be felt by the people of that state for at least 50 years."—Detroit Free Press.

A woman in Pawtucket dreamed she would die at noon the following day, and busied herself during the morning getting her grave clothes. Not to be behindhand, her husband went out to have a weed placed on his hat. When the deceased saw this she got mad and has been quite alive ever since.

Of course, a husband can open his wife's letters if he gets a chance, but he imperils his immortal soul if he says what he thinks of the girl who would criss-cross manuscript like that and then write on the edges of the paper.—Journal of Education.

A Harvard professor has made the calculation that if men were really as big as they sometimes feel there would be room in the United States for only two professors, three lawyers, two doctors, and a reporter on a Philadelphia paper.

You take a basin of water, place your finger in it for twenty-five or thirty-five seconds, take it out and look at the hole that is left. The size of the hole represents about the impression that advice makes on a young man's mind.

As the act-drop fell Mrs. Galatine fixed her eyes on it and studied it curiously. "You seem to be enjoying the drop," remarked her husband. "I am." "Well, I think I'll enjoy one myself." And he softly stole out.—Tid-Bits.

"Look at that rabbit, ma," said a little tot as she curiously watched the peculiar twinkle of the animal's features. "Every time he stops to smell anything he seems to stutter with his nose."—Yonkers Gazette.

The Seabrook (N. H.) selectmen have decided that a hen is not an animal. All those that have ever dined at a boarding house will agree with them. The hen is a mineral.—Burlington Free Press.

It is announced that "Paris has set its ban upon the tall-tower bonnet." Unless the "ban" aforesaid weighs about a ton it will not crush the tall bonnet in this country.—Norristown Herald.

A burglar was captured in New Haven the other night, having fallen asleep in a rocking-chair. The poor fellow was probably trying to steal a nap.—Yonker's Statesman.

Brown—"How your eyes flashed while you were talking to Miss DeVere, Jones!" Jones—"Of course they did, my boy. I was sparking."—Judge.

The practice of paying bills is what keeps so many people poor.—Philadelphia North American.

"Oppress not nature, sinking down to rest,
With tears too late, too solid, or too full."

Armstrong when he wrote these lines, gave good scientific advice. Half of our people suffer from dyspepsia in some of its many forms. Life becomes a burden, and business worries and annoys. The "Golden Medical Discovery" invented and prepared by Dr. Pierce, is an effective remedy for indigestion. By druggists.

A Good Appetite

Is essential to good health; and at this season it is often lost, owing to the poverty or impurity of the blood, and the weakening effect of the changing season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful medicine for creating an appetite, toning the digestion, and giving strength to the whole system.

"When I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I was dizzy in the morning, had a headache, and no appetite; but now I can hardly get enough cooked to eat." EMMA SHEPARD, 1 Coral street, Worcester, Mass.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for dyspepsia, which I have had for the last nine or ten years, suffering terribly. It has now entirely cured me." Mrs. A. NORTON, Chicopee, Mass.

"I must say Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I ever used. Last spring I had no appetite, and the least work I did fatigued me ever so much. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon fel as if I could do as much in a day as I had formerly done in a week. My appetite is voracious." MRS. M. V. BAYARD, Atlantic City, N. J.

This is the end then of striving; this is what comes of it all:
Darkness and foes just behind one; before, an impassable wall.
What does it matter how staunchly one may have battled for truth,
When with his weapons all broken he sits by the grave of his youth?
What did it profit in past years that one did the best that he knew,
When in the gloom of the present, virtue herself seems untrue?
Why should one fight any longer when nothing remains but defeat?
Surely such labor were useless, and idle the stirring of feet.

Ah! but the soul that is faithful knows it is good to have fought;
Knows it is good to have acted, whatever the doing has brought.
This is the crown of the conflict, this the reward of all strife—
Faith in one's self, and one's motives, no matter how darkened the life.
Flesh may be bruised and defeated, but spirit is never disgraced:
Spirit is always triumphant, whatever sharp pain it has faced.

Here, at the end of my conflict, I counsel not yet with despair,
Though to all seeming my struggles are his who but beateth the air.
Darkness and foes are about me, yet I stand with my back to the wall,
Facing whatever Fate sends me, and facing Fate thus I shall fall!

MISS BECKY'S HOME.

Miss Becky was going to the "Old Ladies' Home" at last. It was a sorry fact, but there was nothing else for her to do, it seemed. Who would think of offering any other home to a poor, almost helpless old woman who had outlived her usefulness? Having passed her days in other people's houses, so to speak, she might not mind it so much, perhaps, as a more fortunate being.

"Yes," she said, "there's a vacancy in the 'Old Ladies' Home,' and the hundred dollars that Parson Amory left me will pay my way in, but it wouldn't last long if I began to spend it, you know, and I shall have a warm bed and my regular meals without worrying about where the next one's coming from. I'm most tired worrying about ways and means. Seems as though I had been about it all my life; ever since father was taken with heart disease hearing the class in algebra. Now that the rheumatism has got the better of me, so that I can't work in cold weather, and the doctor says it'll draw my fingers up so that I can't use them soon, it doesn't seem as if there was anything left for me in this world but the home—and I ought to be thankful for that!"

Miss Becky had had other expectations in her heyday, when young Larry Rogers met her and carried her basket; when his strong arm paddled her down the broad river to church on Sunday mornings; when they sang together in the choir from the hymn book; when they loitered homeward in the fragrant summer dusk, and heard the whip-poor-will complain, and starled the fireflies in the hedges as they brushed by. It sometimes seemed to Miss Becky as if all this had happened in another planet. She was young then with a bloom on her cheek; but although the rheumatism had bent her figure and rendered her more or less helpless at times, yet her dark, velvety eyes looked out like soft stars, and the ghost of a dimple still flickered on her cheek and chin in spite of her sixty odd years. Miss Becky's father had been the district school teacher in those far-off days of her girlhood. He had taught her the simple lore at his command, but it was Larry Rogers who had taught her music, hour after hour, in the empty schoolhouse; they had practiced together, while he wrote the score on the blackboard. But all this had not sufficed to enable her to earn a livelihood. Her education, musical and otherwise, had stopped short of any commercial value. In those days she never expected to earn a living by the sweat of her brow. Larry was going to give her everything. How trivial the little quarrel seemed to-day which circumvented this fine resolve of his! But what magnitude it had assumed at the time! On his return from a trip to a neighboring city, some busybody had whispered to Larry that Miss Becky had been seen driving with Squire Eustis' son Sam behind his trotters. Sam was just home from college, a harumscarum fellow, they said, who made love right and left and gambled a bit; and when Larry reproached her with it she had not denied; she had simply said: "What then? If you choose to listen to gossip rather than wait till you—"

"But you didn't tell me, and I've been home a week."

"I had fogotten all about it till you reminded me," said Becky.

"It's such an every-day affair for you to drive with Sam Eustis!"—which incredulity so stung Becky that she would not condescend to explain that she had carried some needlework up to Squire Eustis', which she had been doing for his wife, and that as she left to walk home Sam was just starting off with his smart chaise and new dapple-grays, and the Squire had said, "Take Miss Becky home, Sam, and show her their paces;" and how she had been ashamed to refuse their kindness, although preferring to walk a thousand times; and how, once in the chaise, Sam had been the pink of courtesy, and had begged her to drive over with him to Parson Amory's, three miles out of her way, "That Lucy Amory may see you don't disdain my company. For, you see," said Sam, who was not as black as he was painted, or as many liked to suppose, "Lucy can make me what she will; without her I shall be nothing and nobody; but they've told her all sorts of wild things about me; they've told her she might as well jump into the river as marry such a scapegrace. And, perhaps, if I made her a little jealous—you know there's no harm in that, is there? All's fair in love; and, perhaps, if the old folks see me driving about with Becky Thorne my stock may go up, and I may be 'saved from the burning,' as Parson Amory says," and Becky had consented. How could she refuse to do a service for such a true lover? So light a thing, too! She had often traversed the same road since on foot, on her daily rounds of toil or mercy. Sam Eustis had married Lucy Amory years ago, and was the foremost man in the country to-day. Strange how that friendly drive had interfered with Miss Becky's prospects; how the simple fact of carrying home Mrs. Eustis' needlework should have determined her fate and devoted her to a life of hardship and the Old Ladies' Home at the end! Talk of trifles! Poor Miss Becky! She remembered that once or twice the opportunity had offered when she might have made it up with Larry; but pride, or a sort of fine reserve, had locked her lips—Larry ought to know that she was above silly flirtations. Once, when they met at Lucy Amory's wedding, when they all went out into the orchard while the bride planted a young tree and the guests looked for four-leaved clovers, she had found herself—whether by accident or design she could not tell—on the grass beside Larry; their fingers met over the same lucky clover, their eyes met above it, and for an instant she had it on her tongue's end to confess all about the drive and its result, to put pride in her pocket, but just then Nell Amory called to Larry:—

"Oh, a horrid spider!—on my arm, Larry! Kill him, quick—do! Oh—oh—oh! I shall die—I shall faint!" And that was the end it

The old orchard, with its fragrant quince bushes, its gnarled apple trees, its four-leaved clovers, was a thing of the past; a cotton-mill roared and thundered there all day long, where the birds built and the trees bourgeoned thirty odd years ago. It no longer blossomed except in Miss Becky's memory. She had turned her thoughts to raising plants when she was left to her own resources, but one cruel winter's night killed all her slips, and the capital was lacking by which she might renew her stock. Since then she had gone out for daily sewing, had watched with the sick, had been in demand for a temporary housekeeper whenever a tired matron wished an outing; but latterly her eyes no longer served her for fine work, and sewing-machines had been introduced; she was not so alert in the sick room as of yore; she moved more slowly, and her housekeeping talent was no longer in request; added to this, the bank where her little earnings had been growing one day failed and left her high and dry. Some of her friends had travelled to pastures new, some had married away, some had ignored or forgotten her. As for Larry Rogers, he had been away from Plymouth this many a year. Somebody had sent him abroad after Lucy Amory's marriage to develop his musical genius. He had grown into a famous violinist, playing all over the country to crowded houses, before the finest people in the land. It was a beautiful romance to Miss Becky to read in the Plymouth Record about our "gifted townsman;" she seemed to hear the echo of his violin when the wind swept through the pine boughs; she did not blame him because she sat in the shadow, because her life had been colorless. She sang again the old tunes he had taught her, and made a little sunshine in her heart. All of happiness she had ever known he had brought her. Why should she complain? And now she was going to the Old Ladies' Home.

"It isn't exactly what I expected in my youth," she said to the old doctor's widow.

"No; but you'll have a nice room and a bright fire and the neighbors will drop in to see you and make it home-like. Now there's old Mrs. Gunn. Nothing can persuade her to go to the home. She says it's only a genteel almshouse after all; and so she rubs along with what little she can earn and what the neighbors have a mind to send in, and they have to do it mighty gingerly, too, just as if they were asking a favor of her. Lor', she doesn't earn her salt."

"I dare say," returned Miss Becky. "Now, if it hadn't been for the rheumatism I could earn my living for years yet, and maybe get something ahead again. But it seems as if the rheumatism laid in wait for the poor and friendless."

"You ought to have married when you were young, Becky," said the doctor's widow, who had forgotten all about Becky's love affair and labored under the impression that she never had a chance, an impression which matrons are apt to entertain concerning their single friends. Miss Becky had been spending some weeks with Mrs. Doctor Dwight, who had moved away from Plymouth after her husband's death. She was there chiefly in order to put some stiches into the widow's wardrobe, which nobody else would do "so reasonably," that lady's grief having incapacitated her for holding a needle or giving her mind to the material details of "seam, and gusset, and band." But during the visit Miss Becky had been seized with her sharpest attack of rheumatism, which had kept her in bed for weeks, till her wages were exhausted by drugs and doctor's fees. It was at this time that she made up her mind to go into the home on her return to Plymouth.

Mrs. Dwight saw her off at the station. "I hope you'll find the home cosy," she said, outside the car window. "It's lucky Parson Amory left you that hundred dollars after all. He might have doubled it."

"Yes, I suppose so," Miss Becky answered, meekly. Perhaps she was thinking if she were Mrs. Dwight no old friend of hers should go begging for a refuge at an almshouse. Perhaps she was thinking of the pretty, comfortable home waiting for her friend, and wondered why their fortunes were so unlike.

"Write when you reach Plymouth and let me know how you're suited," said Mrs. Dwight, and just then the cars gave a lurch and left her behind and Miss Becky turned her glance inwards. Somebody had taken the seat beside her.

"Your friend was speaking of Parson Amory and Plymouth," he said. "I couldn't help hearing. I was born in Plymouth myself, but I haven't met a soul from there these twenty years. I'm on my way down to look up my old friends."

"Twenty years is a long time," answered Becky. "I'm afraid you won't find many of your old friends left. You'll hardly know Plymouth."

"I suppose not—I suppose not. Have you lived there long?"

"I? I have lived there all my days."

"Good! I'm hungry for news of the people. Tell me everything you can think of. Did Parson Amory leave you a fortune? He was called close. Where's Miss Nell—married or dead? I can see the old place in my mind's eye; and the parsonage under the elms, and the orchard behind it where Lucy Amory planted a young tree on her wedding day, and the gown little Becky Thorne wore—by-the-way, is she alive? Do you know her?"

Miss Becky hesitated an instant.

"Yes," she replied. "I know her—more or less. She's alive."

"And married?"

"Well, no; she never married."

"She must be sixty odd; she was a pretty creature, such—I suppose there are wrinkles now! Where have the years gone? Is her home in the old place still?"

"Her home?" said Miss Becky, flushing a little. She is on her way to the Old Ladies' Home."

"To the Old Ladies' Home! Becky Thorne!" he gasped. "And I—"

"You seem to have known her pretty well," said Becky, who was beginning to enjoy the incognito.

"I should think so! I've loved Becky Thorne from my cradle; we had a silly quarrel which parted us—such a trifle, when I look back. Do you ever look back, madam?"

The twilight was falling about them; Becky's face had grown a shade or two paler all at once; she turned her dark, velvety eyes full upon him with a startled air

"Yuo," she said, "you must be Larry Rogers!" Then the color swept to her cheeks in a crimson wave. "Do you know, I never thought you had grown old like myself! Don't you know me? I am Becky Thorne."

Just then the train thundered through the tunnel and they forgot that they were sixty odd.

"On the way to the Old Ladies' Home," she wrote Mrs. Dwight, "I was persuaded to go to an old gentleman's instead."

CALEB'S PREDICAMENT.

It was during the summer of 1870 that Caleb Blunt occupied with his family one of a row of high-stoop houses in Henry street, Brooklyn. Returning from his office in New York late one afternoon, he was about to ascend the steps which led to the front door of his dwelling when his eye caught sight of the open dining-room windows, and, acting upon a sudden thought which circumstances suggested, he entered the court yard, and approaching the windows peered into the room.

The table was spread for dinner, and in confirmation of a suspicion which was in his mind at the moment, Caleb observed that the solid silver ware, handed down by his wife's grandmother (dear venerable lady, was displayed with a prodigality out of keeping with the precautions taken to guard it. Forks were beside the plates, teaspoons were in the holders, and tablespoons like crossbones, lay dreaming of an hour when they should be called into play. All this Caleb took in with one eye, while with the other he remarked that the room was without an occupant. Doubtless the waitress was just then in the kitchen, hobnobbing with the cook; the various members of the family were in the upper part of the house, and the dining room, with its precious contents, was at the mercy of any dishonest person who might chance to be passing by.

Now, Caleb Blunt was not a bad-tempered man, or one easily provoked to anger, but it cost him something of an effort to refrain from punishing such an exhibition of carelessness on the part of the girl with a sharp reprimand and immediate dismissal. He did administer the reprimand when the family was seated at dinner, reminding Jane that she was in no position to replace his property in case it was stolen, and warned her that if she left the windows open again under similar circumstances, she would have to go. It was not many days after this that Blunt came home to find the same condition of affairs existing. The sashes were up, the table was set and nobody was on guard. "So," thought the good man, "my lecture has been of no avail. Miss Jane is bent on having me robbed if she can. I have it; she shall be taught a lesson this time that she will not soon forget." And with a smile at his own ingenuity, Caleb stealthily climbed in at the window, gained the table on tiptoe, gathered the silver ware together, wrapped it in a napkin, stole back to the window and out into the street, unheard and unseen by anybody in the house.

The adventure was so singular a one; the joke so good and so capitally carried out, that Caleb could scarcely suppress a shout of laughter as he pictured the waitress' terror and confusion when she entered the room and took in the state of things. It was too good to keep and Caleb ran lightly up the stoop to let himself in at the front door and hasten up stairs to tell his wife. The latch-key did not fit easily on this occasion, and after blowing into it several times to no purpose, the good man concluded to ring the bell. Yet, stay. That would bring Jane to the door; the silver was sticking out of his pocket and might reveal the plot. Again, his arrival home just at the juncture of the property disappearing would have a suspicious look, Caleb hesitated. The next moment his blood froze with horror. He discovered that, owing to the houses in the row being alike he had in a fit of absent-minindedness mistaken the domicile and was attempting to enter the one adjoining his own. The heat of the day was not accountable for all the perspiration that stood on Blunt's brow when he made this discovery and began to realize what a serious blunder he had made and the awkward situation in which he had placed himself. His own dining-room windows were closed and fastened, he could see that from where he stood—while his next-door neighbor's were open, and a thief in the person of himself had despoiled the premises of its silver! Here was a predicament. Several solutions presented themselves to the poor man's troubled mind. Should he boldly ring his neighbor's bell, ask for the mistress (he had never exchanged a word with any of the family, indeed, he was unable to recall their name,) explain the matter and return the property with his apologies, or should he, more boldly, conceal his identity as the robber, and allow his neighbor to think that a professional thief had done the work.

He dismissed the first proposition as likely to appear unnatural or at least improbable in the eyes of the family, and the second was of course repugnant to his honor and not to be seriously entertained. Besides he might have been seen entering or emerging from the window by the occupants of houses on the other side of the street, and in case the theft should become noised abroad witnesses might appear against him. So there seemed nothing for it but to go quietly back and replace the silver from whence he had taken it. True, it might be too late for that. In all probability some of the servants were now in the room, and if he met any of them he would have to make a clean breast of the whole affair, and take the chances of being believed. However, something had to be done and that pretty quickly, so Caleb crept slowly down the steps feeling like a guilty wretch, and regained the open casement. To his great joy on bending over and peering into the apartment he found nobody there. So without the loss of another moment he slipped in and laid the napkin with its silver on the table. Then with a bound he was outside again and in his own house, where he sank down on a chair in the hall breathless from the excitement of the last ten minutes. But the property the poor man had so innocently purloined was restored, Caleb thanked God in his heart for that, and come what might out of the adventure, his conscience was clear and he could face a frowning world. With the strength and courage imparted by this reflection, Caleb arose, and slowly ascending the stairs, sought the apartments of his wife, to whom he confided the whole story. But he was careful to exact a solemn promise from her that she would never, never tell Jane.

THE CROSS-EYED CLERK.

During the late Christmas holidays a large firm in B—— employed as an assistant clerk a young man who was exceedingly cross-eyed.

The especial duty assigned to him was to act as watchman, and prevent the peculation of all sorts of small fancy articles that were lying about the counters for exhibition at that time.

One day a half-grown boy came into the store, and after looking all around, pricing first one thing and then another, among which were some very nice socks, he finally started to go out of the door.

At this moment the new clerk touched him lightly on the shoulder, and inviting him to come to the back part of the store, said to him, politely, "Oblige me by giving me at once the socks that you have in your back pocket."

"How do you know I have any socks in my back pocket?" demanded the boy in a bold tone.

"I saw you put them there," said the clerk, very gently.

The boy looked up into the young man's face in utter amazement. "Are you looking at me now?" he asked, earnestly. "Do you see me this very minute?" he asked, still more earnestly.

"Of course I do," replied the clerk.

"Good Lord, mister!" cried the boy, with a blanching face; "here's your socks." And with a bound he was out of the back door, over the fence, and away, having learned a lesson concerning all-seeing eyes which it is to be hoped he may never forget.—Lucy Underwood McCann in Harper's Magazine for May.

THE DEMURE LITTLE WIDOW.

"Just think of it," he growled, with disgust written in every line of his face. "I was coming of St. Louis the other day, and the car being crowded, I gave half my seat to a demure little widow."

"How do you know she was a widow?"

"She told me so. She said she was awfully afraid of being robbed, and knowing by my face that I was an honest man, she wanted me to take charge of her portmonaie until we reached Chicago."

"And you did?"

"Am I not a fool? Yes, I did, and as she passed it over she sweetly said, 'There's exactly $90 in it.' We rode to Chicago without leaving our seats. As we ran into the city I handed her the purse. She opened it and counted the money."

"Why, there isn't but $50 here," she said, as she looked at me."

"But I haven't taken any."

"Well, I am $40 short, as you see. Perhaps you can explain it to the police."

"And what did you do?"

"I gave her $40 of course. Please kick me a few hundred times."

Three Loafers.

Three loafers stood out on the streets all day,
And talked when they should have been looking for work;
The fruits of labor they gladly eat,
But labor itself is a horror they shirk,
For men will loaf and complain of hard times,
Accusing the rich men of all sorts of crimes,
While the bright world lies before them.

Three wives stood over their wash tubs grim,
They washed and they scrubbed till the sun went down;
Each thought of the vagrant who called her wife,
And patiently struggled her sorrow to drown,
For women must work and men must eat,
And somebody has got to make both ends meet,
And the landlord calls in the morning.

Three "drunks" lay out stiff in the station house—
Lay there in their cells at the break of day.
Three poor wives came down with their hard earned mites,
The fines of these lords of creation to pay.
For woman's devotion is a part of her life;
The bigger the brute the more faithful the wife;
And so 'twill go on forever.

THE TRAVELLER'S TREE.

A European traveller, on his way from the coast of Madagascar to the capital, Tananarivo, in the interior, had emptied his water-flask, and was suffering from thirst. He asked one of the natives of his party when he should be able to obtain water.

"Any time you like," said the native, smiling.

The European saw no signs of springs or water; but the natives conducted him to a group of tall palm-like trees, standing in a cluster on the edge of the forest, with straight trunks and bright-green, broad leaves growing from the opposite sides of the stalk, and making the tree appear like a great fan. The white man gazed admiringly at the tree.

"You think it is a fine tree," said the native, "but I will show you what it is good for."

He pierced the root of one of the leaf-stems, at the point where it joined the tree, with his spear, whereupon a stream of clear water spurted out, which the European caught in his water-can, and found cool, fresh, and excellent to drink.

The party having satisfied their thirst and taken a supply, the native who had spoken went on:

"This tree, which is good for us in more ways than one, we call the traveller's tree."

"But where does the water come from that the tree contains?" asked the white man. "Is it taken up from the soil?"

"Oh, no," said the native. "The leaves drink in the rain that falls on them, and when it has passed all through them it becomes very pure and sweet."

"And are there many of these trees on the island?"

"There are so many that sometimes one sees no other trees for a mile; and very often we take no provision of water when we travel, because we know that we shall find the traveller's tree."

"And you say there are other things that that they are good for?"

The native answered by asking another question.

"Do you remember," he said, "the village that we passed through this morning, with its wooden huts roofed over with leaves? Those huts were made of nothing but the traveller's tree. The wood splits easily, but makes tough planks for floors, and the walls of the houses are made of the bark. With the branches we make the rafters, and the leaves cover the roof. But this is not all that the good tree does. We are coming soon to a village whose people I know, and I will show you more."

The native was eager in his haste to show to the traveller what the tree still had in store for him, and the European, for his part, felt no little curiosity. They arrived soon at the village, and the guide conducted the traveller to the hut of a friend, who received them very hospitably, and soon spread a meal for them.

First, he placed upon a sort of a table a spread made of some vegetable substance, very light and pretty; then he set before his guests two drinking vessels of a material which the white man did not recognize, and then he gave them two utensils, which, although rude in shape, served in the stead of knife and fork.

In the midst of the table he placed a large bowl, filled with cream of very appetizing appearance. In another vessel there was a quantity of oil, with almonds floating upon it.

"Before we begin," said the guide, "I must tell you what I promised. Everything that there is upon this table comes from the traveller's tree. These drinking-cups, these plates, these knives, are made of the wood or the bark of the tree. What you take to be cream is a dish made of the seeds of the tree, pounded up with meal, and mixed with a kind of milk drawn from the trunk of the tree. What you think are almonds are little cakes made of these seeds, and oil is pressed from the skin or shuck of the seed. As for the water you are about to drink, you know that already. And we get only these things, but some of the people of Madagascar have made a kind of cloth that they wear out of the fibre of the wood."

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 24, 1887.

THE quiet town of Westminister celebrated the 150th anniversary of her settlement Wednesday.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND contemplates another vacation trip next month, it is said, to some quiet place in the mountains.

LAST Saturday's initial dinner of the new Butler club did not develop anything remarkable or of special interest, the attendance being mainly personal friends of the general. Perhaps there will be more fun when the boys get fairly broken in.

CAR STOVES are prohibited for heating railroad cars in New York state after the first of next May, by a bill which Gov. Hill has signed this week, except that they may be used temporarily while a car is standing still. The bill also provides for safety posts for bridges, to protect bridge trusses in case of derailment.

THE Fidelity National Bank of Cincinnati, O., was closed Tuesday, and vice president E. L. Harper, Cashier Ammi Baldwin and Assistant Cashier B. E. Hopkins have been arrested by the United States marshal on charge of misapplying the funds of the bank. The officers of the bank seem to have thrown $1,000,000 or more into the Chicago wheat deal last week, bringing ruin upon the institution and infamy upon themselves.

REV. DR. MARK HOPKINS, ex-president of Williams College, died at Williamstown last Friday, at the age of 85 years. He had been connected with the college for 62 years, 36 years as its president, and it is a remarkable fact that of the 1726 alumni now living, all but 31 have been taught by him. He was one of the foremost educators in the country, and was greatly beloved by all who had passed under his charge as students, as well as by all who knew him.

THE strike of boot-makers in Worcester county, which has been in force since the latter part of January, has practically come to an end. The Knights of Labor have failed to furnish the strikers with funds enough for their support, and on Monday the men decided to go back to work. The lasters and bottomers will continue the fight longer, but they are likely to be only the poorer for it in the end. Experience is a dear teacher, but workingmen show a strange fancy for learning in that school.

JACOB SHARP, the alleged "boss" bribe giver in the New York Broadway railroad steal, who is now on trial in that city, has been allowed to spend his nights at home, under the watchful care of officers, but the sheriff decided last Saturday that he would not assume the responsibility any longer, and accordingly Sharp went to the Ludlow street jail that night. He was given the same cell that Boss Tweed occupied—a commodious and comfortable room, but its associations may suggest some unpleasant forebodings to the occupant.

TRAIN ROBBERS in the Southwest are becoming so bold in their operations that travel in that section will become decidedly unpopular if something is not done to check them. The last robbery of this kind was on the Southern Pacific road near Schulenburg, Texas, early last Saturday morning. Two men boarded the locomotive at the station with drawn revolvers and compelled the engineer to pull the train out to the open prairie, where, around a fire, stood eight or ten men with Winchester rifles, and when the train came up they went through it, securing from $10,000 to $15,000 from the passengers and express car. If this sort of thing is to go on it will be necessary to have armed guards on all trains in unsettled portions of the country.

THIS has been a notable week in England. Queen Victoria has reigned over the British realm for fifty years, and the event has been celebrated with all the pomp and enthusiasm imaginable. Tuesday was the great day, the royal procession going from Buckingham Palace to Westminster Abbey, where was assembled a very brilliant audience of distinguished people to witness the jubilee services, while the route was lined with thousands of loyal Britons who gave the queen a royal reception. Only three of her predecessors on the throne have reigned as long, and few of them as well. Her character and reign fairly entitle her to the respect and admiration she has received, while her vigor and health make it probable that she will continue in her exalted position for some years longer.

To tell the truth, we are a little tired of reading in the New York papers of Mrs. Cleveland's "matchless form," "unrivalled symmetry," "elegant figure" and "superb outlines." Mrs. Cleveland is a very pretty woman, but not more so than hundreds to be seen in the streets daily, and there is no sense or decency in parading her round as if her only thought in life was showing off her figure.—Boston Record.

Jefferson Davis says the order to return the captured flags to the confederate states was violation of military law. He says the flags, being captured by a volunteer army, belong to the several states, and not to the national government.

A successful test with a locomotive burning crude petroleum for fuel was made on the Pennsylvania road last Friday, a mail train making the run over the mountains from Altoona to Pittsburg in excellent time, without smoke or cinders.

The steamer Champlain was burned on Lake Michigan early last Friday morning, and of the 57 persons on board twenty or more perished. Eight lives were lost on Lake Erie Monday evening, by the sinking of a steam barge.

The village of Washburn, Ill, was nearly wiped out by fire last Saturday morning, 17 business houses being destroyed. The village had no fire protection.

Two unruly elephants caused a panic in a circus at New Lisbon, Ohio, Saturday night, and injured several people.

Nearly two hundred pilgrims were recently drowned in the Danube by the upsetting of a boat.

Morris Moriarty and another of Palmer against Patrick J. Leary and another of Palmer, for action of contract; Gardner for plaintiff, Taft and Kenefick for defendant. Samuel H. Hellyar, of Palmer, against Michael St. John, of Palmer, for action of contract; Gardner for plaintiff, defendant defaulted.

Daniel Pratt, known far and wide as "The Great American Traveler," died at the city hospital in Boston on Monday, having had a stroke of paralysis last Friday. Pratt was born in 1809. His mind became unbalanced in early life, and for some 50 years he led a wandering life, visiting the colleges regularly, where he was always received uproariously by the students. He visited Palmer occasionally in former years, his harangues furnishing amusement to the street crowds, and depending for his subsistence upon their contributions and the aid of charitable persons.

Those who are interested in athletic sports will be in attendance at the park to-morrow afternoon, when a grand field day programme is advertised. There will be a Græco-Roman wrestling-match for a gold gold medal, open to all; a race of 220 yards between P. J. Murphy, of Wilbraham, against the fastest trotting horse in this vicinity, for a purse of $50; a 50-yards dash, open to all, for a silver cup; a three-legged race for a box of cigars; a sack-race for a gold medal; an obstacle race, in which a man has wagered to carry a man, and run 60 yards, while another runs 100 yards; a shot-throwing match, for a box of cigars; a 500-yards hurdle-race between J. J. O'Brien, of Orange, and P. J. Murphy, of Wilbraham, for $250 a side.

KILLED BY THE CARS.

Ignaz Schiblo, a German cigar maker, 49 years of age, was struck by the 5.40 express from Boston and instantly killed, near the Tenneyville crossing last Saturday evening. Schiblo and a companion had unsuccessfully sought work in Boston, and were on their way home at the time of the accident. When the train was within a few rods of the men, Schiblo, for some unknown reason, stepped from the south track, on which they were walking, directly in front of the engine, which struck and threw him into the air three times before dropping the body at one side. The body was brought to this station, viewed by Medical Examiner Holbrook, and then placed in the tomb. The deceased left a wife and two children in New York city. His companion was furnished a ticket to New York by F. J. Wassum and others.

THE HIGH SCHOOL.

The coming week at the high school is to be a busy one. Written examinations will occur in some branches during the early days of the week; on Thursday, and again on Friday forenoon, public examinations will be held in such branches as will prove interesting to visitors, and all interested in the school are invited to be present. At 3 o'clock, Friday afternoon, the annual prize speaking and reading will occur, the Temple Quartette of Boston furnishing music. Public anticipation is especially centered upon the grand entertainment to be given Friday evening by the Temple Quartette, and Leland T. Powers. The quartette is an old favorite in Palmer, and Mr. Powers is destined to become even more so. Tickets for the concert will be on sale to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock at the high school room, and after Saturday noon may be obtained at LeGro & Lynde's drug store. The prizes for the reading will be awarded after the concert.

FOREST LAKE.

The season at Forest Lake has fairly commenced, and dates are being made rapidly. Last Saturday a party of two carloads came from Warren, and a small party was also present from Ware. Sunday also saw a large number on the grounds. To-morrow the Methodist churches of Springfield unite in a picnic to the lake, some 700 people being expected. July 9th the Unitarian churches of Springfield have the grounds. The first of the social hops will be held this evening, with music by the Thorndike orchestra, and will be continued weekly during the season. On the Glorious Fourth a shore dinner will be served, with various other attractions, in addition to which these athletic sports will be contested under the management of P. J. Murphy of North Wilbraham: Catch-as-catch-can wrestling match, prize $20 gold medal; single scull boat race, prize, $25 gold medal; 100 yards running race, cash prize, $4; sack race, prize $3; shot putting contest, prize, $2; three legged race, prize, $3.

THE CELEBRATION ON THE FOURTH.

In response to a call, a goodly number of business men and citizens met at the court room Monday evening to talk up the matter of celebrating the Fourth of July, and it was decided to have a parade of antiques and horribles on the morning of the Fourth. W. W. Leach was chosen chairman, and these committees appointed: Chief marshal, W. R. Milligan; assistant marshals, Frank N. Carpenter, Owen Marcy, J. Foley, Charles L. Teague; committee of arrangements, William McDonald, D. E. Robinson, Hugh Hanley, J. Bradley and Mark Shearer; committee on music, F. O. Munger, W. A. Weld and C. L. Teague; soliciting committee, M. Shearer, Stephen Willard, J. Foley, Charles Reed and Michael Murphy. All who intend to take part are requested to meet at the Point of Rocks at 5 a. m., sharp. All seem to be taking hold in earnest, and a good turnout is already assured. Everybody is requested to take part and help make the display a grand success.

MORE LIQUOR RAIDS.

This has been a week of raids on the liquor dealers, but without great success in only one instance. Monday the Converse House was visited, and a small quantity of liquor found in a trunk, but it was claimed as private property by a traveling salesman. Wednesday forenoon the saloons of S. J. Ferry and John Feeney were raided. At the former place a jug of rum was found in the cellar, and at the latter place a jug of whisky in the room overhead, both claimed to belong to tenants who live in the blocks. It remained for officers Healey and Merriam to make the grand scoop in the afternoon, when they seized about 75 gallons of old Bourbon whisky at the house of John J. Daly, on the cross road from the Burley farm to Palmer Center. In the morning Daly had "Buck" Flynn before the district court charged with the larceny of a sum of money from his house while employed by him. Naturally "Buck" didn't take kindly to such treatment, and to get even with Daly gave the officers a "point." When the seizure was made Mrs. Daly claimed no ownership in the liquor, alleging that it belonged to M. Roche, who runs a saloon in Thorndike.

THAT CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

Editor Journal:—In your issue of June 17th you call the attention of Prohibitionists to the fact that Representative Taft "voted in favor of the prohibitory constitutional amendment." As a Prohibitionist allow me to question the accuracy of that statement, as I think it may mislead some of your readers. Mr. Taft did vote to submit the question of constitutional prohibition to the people of the state. As a Republican, elected on a platform expressly pledging his party to such action, I do not see how he could, with decency, have done otherwise. I very much doubt if Mr. Taft ever did or ever will pledge himself to support and vote for such an amendment when it comes before the people for final settlement. When he does that Prohibitionists will be glad to have you call their attention to the fact. I also notice that you have not called the attention of the people to the fact that the pledge of the Republican party to submit the question to the people has not been redeemed. G.

Three Rivers, June 22, 1887.

☞Our Prohibition freind, like many in his party, is unwilling to allow that any good thing can come out of Nazareth. He admits that Mr. Taft "did vote to submit the question of constitutional prohibition to the people." No member of the Legislature could have voted any more in favor of the amendment than that, and we suspect that "G." would have been very quick to quote our representative as opposing the amendment if he had voted "No." It is "G." who is misleading. Mr. Taft's possible attitude in the future has nothing to do with the present question. Our critic ignores the fact that a large majority of the Republicans in the Legislature voted favorably on the question of submitting the matter to the people, though a few stood out and defeated it. But would the Prohibitionists have done any better on a matter where there is such a divergence of opinion in the party? And did they do any better when, last fall, they defeated several Republicans who would have voted in favor of the amendment, and elected Democrats who opposed it?

EAST BRIMFIELD.

The saw, grist and planing mills of Samuel McAllister were burned yesterday morning. Loss, $3500.

WALES.

E. Shaw has returned from his western trip having visited thirteen states and territories, and Canada. He reports a pleasant surprise in finding the JOURNAL at several places in Kansas, where he made the longest stay.

BRIMFIELD.

The real estate of the late G. H. Upham was sold at auction Wednesday to Harriet N. Griggs for $325.

A good many farmers had hay cut when the rain came this week, but none of it had been got into the barns.

E. T. Sherman has had a telephone connecting with the Palmer exchange placed in his house. A pay station has also been established at J. F. Converse's store, where any one can use the instrument at a slight charge.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Mr. Woodard, one of our oldest residents on the "mountain," is seriously ill.

The water in the river has been very low, and the grain mill has been grinding nights instead of days, in consequence.

Mrs. T. C. Bradway of Monson, formerly of this place, has been visiting friends here during the past week.

The Christian Endeavor society will have a lawn party and pineapple tea next Tuesday evening, when they hope to raise sufficient funds to pay the expenses of the delegates to Saratoga.

M. A. Lane has just completed a fine house of twenty rooms opposite the north end of nine mile pond, about half a mile from the village, and hopes to fill it with boarders this summer. There is a fine grove near the house, and a tennis court, which with the boating facilities make a very fine establishment. About twenty couples celebrated the opening of the house with a strawberry and ice cream party.

THORNDIKE.

Low water caused some short time the past week.

The Thorndike Co. will put in a new engine at No. 1 mill.

D. W. Gray is soon to remove his family to Lonsdale, R. I.

Geo. Merritt's child was severely bitten by a dog this week.

The Thorndike orchestra will furnish music for the Forest Lake hops.

H. T. Bishop has just purchased a handsome pair of iron grays, and sold his Jersey match to Fred Snow.

Dan McCarty has returned from Boston, a severe surgical operation performed upon him there being a success.

Base ball at Palmer Town—Thorndikes 40, Palmer Towns 15. At Three Rivers—Sky Rockets of Thorndike 32, Three Rivers 24.

Jas. McGrath died Tuesday night. He was quiet and uncomplaining, and had many friends. His funeral took place Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The Thorndike Co. fire department now makes great time. On Thursday they ran out the cart, coupled to hydrant and had three streams on in 1½ minutes after alarm sounded, during practice.

WARREN.

Miss Cummings and Miss Strickland are home from Smiths college.

Mr. Hitchens closed school Thursday, in time to attend the exercises at Waterville, Maine.

The graduating exercises take place next Friday evening in the town hall. There are seven to graduate.

Joseph Hastings attended the examination at Amherst the past week, as he expects to enter college this fall.

The examination of the different grades in school was held the past week, preparatory to entering the grammar and high schools.

The inhabitants on Bacon street propose to have a reservoir on "Fairbanks' hill," and bring water to all on the street who wish it.

Robert Hastings is the delegate to the Christian Endeavor convention at Saratoga. A number of our people propose to attend the meeting.

The high school alumni voted at their last meeting to have a supper at the hotel the 6th of July, and all members of the different graduating classes are invited.

The first grammar school had a picnic at Flannery's grove last Saturday afternoon, and the second grammar school will have a picnic on "Mark's" mountain to-morrow.

The welcome rain came Wednesday and made every body look pleasant. The small boys say they hope to have some time to play now, as their mornings and evenings have been devoted to watering flowers.

The Sabbath school concert last Sabbath evening at the Congregational church was well attended. The floral decorations were good and there was a large display. The children in the primary department, forty-three in number, were each presented with a potted plant.

The wedding bells rang again Wednesday, when Miss Skerry and Mr. Hosley were united in marriage at her father's residence. A large company was present, many of them from abroad. The bride was attired in white, with veil and flowers. A large number of presents were given by their many friends. The bridal pair left on the evening train for a short trip, and will make their home in Warren on their return.

WEST WARREN.

Rev. J. C. Osgood of Holyoke will occupy the pulpit in the Methodist church next Sunday.

The Great American dime and specialty company will hold forth in Washington hall, Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights.

The Warren Cotton Mills are already beginning to feel the effects of low water, and Tuesday they were obliged to open the gate of the reservoir at West Brookfield.

Rev. B. F. Kingsley of the M. E. church commenced a series of Sunday evening lectures last Sunday evening. His subject was "Scenes in and about Newburyport."

The lawn party given by the ladies of the M. E. church last Saturday on Agent J. W. Brown's grounds was a perfect success. The grounds were handsomely decorated and illuminated, over 300 Japanese lanterns being used for the purpose. It is estimated there were nearly 600 people present, many of them from surrounding towns.

The Good Templers netted about $25 at their entertainment last Friday night. The parts were all well taken, and the singing, both solo and quartette, was excellent. An original Dutch sketch acted by the Neu brothers, and written by Henry L. Neu, brought down the house, and the audience was hardly satisfied with a repetition.

Arrangements have been made for a grand picnic in Crossman's grove Saturday afternoon for the benefit of St. Thomas' Catholic church. There will be the usual athletic sports, dancing, and a walking match between T. J. Daley of Warren, the champion 3-mile runner of Worcester county, and James C. Little, the champion of Massachusetts. A silver watch will be given to the best lady dancer, and a gold medal to the best gentleman dancer. M. M. Hennebry and Thomas Flannery are to be the judges.

It is evident that the selectmen and constables are determined to do their duty in regard to illegal liquor selling, for the raids the past week have struck terror to the hearts of the dealers. Although not successful at each place, it is only a question of time when they will be, if the liquor sellers keep on in the business. Eli Arsino and the hotel were searched Saturday night, but they had only a little three per cent. Tuesday night a call was made on the saloon owned by Dan Sullivan in the basement of Crossman's brick block. Nothing was found inside, but Officer Smith discovered a case of lager outside in the back yard. A man had been sent out to remove it, but "Hosea" showed him where it was.

THREE RIVERS.

Dr. Davis is building a barn in the rear of his house recently purchased of Mr. Squires.

John J. Smallwood is to lecture at the Baptist church next Wednesday evening on "The negro as he was, as he is, and as he ought to be." Mr. Smallwood is a student at Wilbraham academy, a pleasing speaker, and knows what he is talking about. The admission will be free.

As Fred Lamarine, accompanied by his wife, started out on his milk route Thursday morning, his horse became unmanageable and threw them both out, seriously hurting Mrs. Lamarine and smashing the milk wagon. Monday the same horse ran away while a boy was driving, and smashed the carriage.

Wednesday evening Capt. Clarion H. Kimball of Holyoke, formerly an officer in Burdan's famous sharp shooters, gave a lecture in the Union church on the battle of Gettysburg. Although the evening was very dark and rainy the church was well filled. Mr. Kimball is one of the most able speakers, and the people of our small village consider themselves fortunate in securing such an eloquent speaker.

Names of scholars perfect in attendance during the spring term, which closed June 17th: First primary—Almina Boissy, Roderique Boissy, Alphouse Barrard, Frank Barrard, Willie J. Morisy, John Bleau. Second primary—Bina Dupont. Third primary—Fannie Barnes, Clovis Cardinal. First intermediate—Amanda A. Garant, Alexander M. Wilson, James M. Wilson, James F. Handley. Second intermediate—Hannah O'Connor, Celia Cardinal, Lucy Graves, Charles Orcutt. Grammar—Inez A. Hunt, Rosa A. Mahoney, Matilda McDougall, Philip C. Story, Katie M. Twiss, Lizzie A. Twiss, Jennie C. Twiss.

Last Friday evening some of the members of the Baptist church, with other friends and neighbors of Rev. F. B. Joy, who has been pastor of that church nearly five years, but quite recently resigned, gave him a surprise, as he is soon to leave town and accept a call to East Longmeadow. Mr. and Mrs. Joy have been rooming at Mr. Howard's and taking their meals at Mrs. Arnold's. About 7 p. m they were informed that they were wanted down at Mrs. Arnold's, and were met by about fifty of their friends. They were first served to an excellent repast brought by the company, then invited up to Mr. Howard's and a very handsome silver butter dish and cake basket were presented to them by Miss Frances Beauregard. Several sums of money and other articles were presented. Mr. Joy responded in a very pleasing and affecting manner. This was followed by singing, and about 10.30 the company took leave, wishing him God speed and prosperity.

WILBRAHAM.

WESLEYAN ACADEMY.

The year just closed has been one of almost unexampled prosperity for Wilbraham's classic school. During the twelve months just passed the academy has not only paid its way but has succeeded in liquidating a debt of $3500 incurred last year on account of extensive repairs. The grounds and buildings were never in finer condition. Materially then nothing seems to be lacking, but it was for some time feared that the academy would lose one of the brightest members of the faculty in the person of Prof. Gill, who for 14 years has been at the head of the Greek department. Now however it seems certain that the Prof. will maintain his connection with the school in spite of the flattering offer he has received from the Portland, Ore., high school. The gymnasium seems to have passed the experimental stage in which it has existed for the last two years, and has undoubtedly become a fixity in the life of the school. Under Prof Paymond's management most gratifying results have been evolved. Attendance upon the regular gymnastic work can only be escaped through a physician's certificate of illness. A record of the physical condition of students is kept, and serves to guide the intelligence of the officers in regard to individual cases. The attachment which old graduates feel for the academy is strongly emphasized by the large number of alumni present during the week.

The exercises of the week began Sunday morning with Dr. Steele's sermon before the graduating class. The preacher's text was Rev. II-7. "To him that overcometh." The term examinations began Monday and continued through Tuesday. On Tuesday afternoon the trustees met and transacted considerable business. The old officers of the association were reëlected, and also the teachers, with the exception of Prof. Harrington, and D. A. Holmes of South Hadley was elected his successor. Class reunions were the order of the day Tuesday, and in the evening Harvey N. Shepard delivered the annual address before the alumni, which was a strong appeal for a broad and liberal education. On Wednesday came the reading of the list of prize winners, in which a great many hearts were deeply interested. Class day exercises, which were so pleasing a divertisment last year, were continued this, and the programme was carried out at 2 o'clock. In the evening of this day the commencement concert was given at Memorial church by the pupils of the musical department, under the direction of Miss Stebbins, Miss Alta Pease of Boston also took part. The exercises of the week culminated in the graduating exercises Thursday forenoon, and the festivities were rounded to a close in the evening by the usual social interview.

The clock for the principal's room in the academy, the gift of the senior class, was put in position last Tuesday.

The chemical engine have arrived and have been turned over by the purchasing committee to the fire department.

A meeting to form a base ball organization was held Thursday evening at Memorial Hall. A large crowd was in attendance.

James Pendergast has bought of G. H. Newton the building now occupied by the People's market, and 5 rods of land, for $1000.

Miss Lizzie Eaton, of Palmyra, N. Y., is the guest of Miss Hattie Cushman. Miss Eaton was formerly a teacher of the academy.

At the examination of candidates for admission to the high school on Monday last, about 20 passed and will be duly admitted at the fall term.

The sale of household furniture at auction next Thursday at 10 o'clock at David Letters' will afford on opportunity to replenish to any desiring housekeeping goods.

Mr. Timothy Feather of Lyon street relates his experience as a member of the band which furnished music 50 years ago at the coronation of Queen Victoria, and on Tuesday he got out his clarionet and with it went back 50 years, playing the airs as played at that time.

P. B. Moore reports quite a California fever among those with whom he has conversed respecting prospects and chances for the future in Pomona and vicinity, and says that he will probably induce twenty families to return with him in August.

A goodly number of the neighbors and friends of Dr. and Mrs. G. E. Fuller called rather informally on them last Tuesday evening and memorized the 10th anniversary of their marrige, and although not a pagent of splendor equal to the fete in honor of England's queen, yet the kindly greeting and sincere friendship manifested would favorably compare in earnestness of purpose.

The following are the names of scholars who were neither tardy nor absent during the past term in district No. 2, and were also perfect in deportment; Charlie S. Wood, Homer S. Beebe, Mamie Fitzgerald, Josie Lander, Edith Lander, Dannie Lander, Charlie Lander. A like honor is due Robbie L. Squier and Freddie H. Squier, who were members of the school for two weeks. These names comprised the entire school.

The people of St. Patrick's church will hold a picnic in Reynolds' grove on the Fourth. In the morning there will be a game of ball between the Hampdens and Monsons, and in the afternoon a tug-of-war between teams from the granite quarry and woolen mills, a 100-yards dash, potato race, sack race, wheelbarrow race, long jump, high jump, and putting the shot, all for suitable prizes. Dancing will commence at 12 o'clock, and refreshments will be served in the grove.

Monson's fire department is made up as follows: Chief engineer, A. A. Gage; first assistant, Fred Fay; second assistant, R. P. Cushman. Engine company No. 1—Joel Thompson, foreman; F. P. Strong, first assistant; N. Hanley, second assistant; A. G. Chapman, J. N. Graves, R. F. Bradway, N. Hughes, John Hughes, E. B. Potter, Elmer Thompson, Fayette Thompson, Chas. Lyons, E. P. Donovan, M. Welch, D. Needham, clerk. Engine company No. 2—Frank Parks, foreman; L. C. Flynt, first assistant; F. H. White, second assistant; John Lahey, Wm. Needham, Frank Bradway, N. A. Bugbee, David Maney, Chas. Peck, Ralph Clifford, J. M. Fagan, Rufus Flynt, G. C. Flynt. F. E. Morris, clerk.

The executive committee for the Fourth of July celebration has appropriated for music $375; fireworks, $300; sports, $100; horses, $100; incidentals, $200; carriages, $200; printing, $50; children, $200. The fun will commence at 12 o'clock the night before with bonfires, followed in the early morning with the horribles. The trades procession will start at 10 o'clock. Three bands have been engaged for the day. There will be exercises at the hall in the afternoon, and a match game of ball at 3 o'clock. In the evening there will be fireworks. Such is the program for Gloucester, if any of our citizens should wish to attend. Monson won't splurge much unless some millionaire Californian steps in and donates liberally for the fun, or as an advertisement.

The eighty-third anniversary of Monson academy began with class-day exercises on the academy grounds Wednesday. The annual sermon will be preached in the Congregational church on Sunday evening. Monday and Tuesday will be devoted to public examinations of the various classes. Tuesday evening, at eight o'clock, the exercises of graduation will be held in Memorial Hall. Coenen's orchestra will provide music. The programme:

THE ACADEMY DEDICATION.

The exercises of dedication of the new academy building will commence at 10 o'clock, on Wednesday of next week, in the chapel of the new building. Rev. S. J. Curtis D. D. will deliver an address, subject: The Christian Academy; Rev. James Tufts will give a history of the institution, and George F. Prentiss will read an original poem. Miss Julia A. Eastman has prepared a dedicatory hymn to be sung on this occasion. After the exercises of the morning, a dinner will be served in Green's Hall. All residents of Monson are invited to contribute without a further request, such articles of food for this dinner as they may feel inclined to do, especially cold meats of all kinds, wheat and brown bread and butter, baked beans, doughnuts, pies, cake, cookies, pickles, cheese, tea, coffee, milk, sugar, and fruit, and they will send their contributions of food to Green's Hall as early as may be possible, Wednesday morning. It is supposed from 200 to 300 guests will be present.

After the dinner the company will return to the academy, where the afternoon will be spent in refreshing memories of old times and friends, with brief informal addresses, and singing of reunion songs. The motto of the afternoon is suggested, "Be happy, at any rate happy as you can." As indicative of the spirit which prevails among the alumni, the following extract is from one of the responses to the invitations sent out: "I fell grateful for the invitation to be present at the dedication of the new academy, and also at the alumni meeting on the 29th. Unfortunately, that is the day of commencment at Yale, but as Yale college will have another commencement, while Monson (I hope) will not have occasion to dedicate another academy in my time, I have decided to go to Monson on that day, the Lord willing, and not to New Haven."

WARE AND VICINITY.

M. V. Howard offers his place near Ware Centre for sale or to rent.

A new concrete walk, a good one, in front of Blood's block on Main street.

Next Monday the time of the forenoon train to Palmer will be changed to 10.49.

The barbers are not quite pleased at being obliged to close their shops on Sundays hereafter.

The Village Improvement Society is putting in granite curbing and concrete walks on Spring street.

The reservoir has been drawn off and cleaned out the past week, and now the water is better than ever.

There is to be a picnic, with shore dinner and dancing, at Sturtevant's grove, Hardwick Pond, the 4th of July.

F. T. Clark has sold a building lot on Main street to C. H. Shepardson, who is expected to build a house and a carriage manufactory thereon.

Anthony M. Morin, of Paris, paid us a visit on Monday. He was on his way to Montreal, and is hoping to make a longer stop in Ware before he returns to his home.

The selectmen and officers made a raid on premises occupied by Thomas Carney near "Thrasher's Bridge" last Saturday night, and took about half a barrel of beer.

The Episcopalians have organized a mission society and elected Dr. E. H. Guild, F. N. Hosmer and Charles H. Lee, the executive committee, and Charles A. Julia secretary and treasurer.

The valuable real estate of L. Hilton on Prospect street is to be sold at auction next Tuesday at 10 o'clock, and will include the greenhouse, which would make a good business for the right man.

The three-tenement house of Henry F. Barnes on West street, that was burned May 24th and nearly re-built, was re-burned about 2 o'clock Monday morning. There is but little doubt that the fire was of incendiary origin, as the building was unoccupied. Insured for $2000.

There is to be a grand parade of antiques and horribles on the morning of July 4th. John Lashua has been chosen chief marshal, and a large number of aids have been appointed, and a generous subscription has been given by the business men and those interested to pay expenses.

The Central Massachusetts will commence next Monday to run three trains each day between Ware and Boston.

Business men from Ware can have about 5½ hours in Boston, and an hour and a half less time on the road than via Palmer.

It is reported that the Old Delavan house is to be fitted up for stores.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, June 15th, 1887.

The important event of the week thus far has been the disturbance created by the Irish sympathizers with the use of Faneuil hall last evening by the British societies for the celebration of the jubilee of Queen Victoria. With fair minded people the Irish have hurt themselves, for they have put themselves in the attitude of denying fair play to people who do not think as they think. On the cars I hear pretty outspoken sentiments about the idea of the Irish thinking they are going to rule this country and not give other people a fair chance. The common sense of the public will not stand it. Yet it is a fact that the British societies would not have been given the use of Faneuil hall, had the issue been fairly raised when permission was asked. The board of aldermen stood six to six on reconsidering the permission and so it was refused, but would have stood six to six on granting permission in the first place, and so it would not have been granted. At the Irish meeting Monday night to protest against the use of the hall last night, John Boyle O'Reilly became highly excited and said: "I want to say that after the royalist banquet tomorrow I shall never enter the walls of this hall again. I will never, so help me God, I will never. May my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, if I ever speak a word for mankind again in Faneuil hall." Well, O'Reilly is impulsive, and I think it would be an easy matter to get him to speak in the hall again if there was a call upon his sympathies. It was unfortunate that Gov. Ames could not be present last night, but he sent a letter of regret which identified him as a sympathizer. You will notice the absence of a similar letter from Mayor O'Brien.

Tremont Temple is crowded to-day at the graduation exercises of the New England Conservatory of Music.

"Hall, court and gallery below
Were crowded with the living flow."

So were the galleries above, both of them, to their utmost capacity, and many people came away because they could not find admittance. On the front of the stage was a brilliant display of peonies. The letters "N. E. C." in bright showy flowers, were on the front of the organ. No other decorations were attempted, unless the hoary heads which are a crown of glory, are counted also. On the platform were Dr. Alvah Hovey, ex-Gov. Rice, Hon. Rufus S. Frost and many others. The occasion showed how popular the conservatory is. Dr. Tourjee, sad to say, is away for a year or so to recover from nervous prostration brought on by overwork. He is said to be a man of great private generosity, and does many kind deeds which are not publicly known.

In a few days the annual report of the prison committee will be ready for distribution from the state printers. It is pretty severe upon certain features of the prison management. It says that the state treats its convicts too leniently. They are better fed and lodged than many of the honest people outside of the jails. They are put at work which is hard only in name, for the tasks can easily be completed long before the hour for closing work for the day. The report censures the county commissioners of the state severely, especially Hampshire county, for having so little care in making good contracts for their labor. In Hampshire county the labor of the prisoners has been contracted out at eight cents a day. In consequence of this fact the new convict labor bill takes from the commissioners the power of making contracts for the prison labor. The use of the Concord reformatory practically as an inebriate asylum is condemned, and that was the reason they prepared the bill to establish a new inebriate asylum, which was referred to the next Legislature. The Northampton prison management is sharply criticised for filth and dirt, and the same objection, in a less emphatic way, is brought against the new Springfield jail.

Joe. V. Meigs, he of elevated railroad fame, must be happy over the report of a committee of the Philadelphia government in favor of his system of road, "for the reason that it is the least obstructive to light, air and the highway." He has had many severe disappointments, and the late Legislature refused to hear his petition for a modification of his original charter, but he should not lay that up against them, for they voted strictly according to their rule. I have an idea that Boston would as soon see the road practically tried first in Philadelphia as in Boston.

It is said that some of the complainants in the Andover controversy do not profess to understand how the visitors voted in the cases of the professors. There can be no doubt of the exact situation, it seems to me, in view of these facts: The charges against the professors were the same, and it was agreed that the argument against Prof. Smyth should stand against the other four. Hence the visitor who voted to acquit the four, would have voted to acquit Smyth. He who voted to remove Smyth would have voted to remove the four. It is also a fact that by the constitution of the board, when only two visitors act, the decision given must be that of the president. Now this explains in a common sense way the opposite verdicts on the same charges and evidence. In the case of Prof. Smyth, President Seelye voted for acquittal. Dr. Eustis and Mr. Marshall voted to remove him. By a majority vote he was removed. In the case of the four other professors, Dr. Eustis declined to act because he did not hear their defense. That left President Seelye and Mr. Marshall. By the constitution of the board, Seelye's vote outweighed Marshall's; and the four were acquitted. That explanation accounts for the facts and removes all appearance of inconsistency in the actions of the several members of the board, though it does not appear why Dr. Eustis should have failed to act, nor why the vote is kept secret.

There is some politics afoot, but it is to early and there will be so much of it before election that I would rather write about something else for a change. You may like to know that a temperance Republican movement is on foot, already organized, to oust Mr. Brackett from the state ticket this fall and to put a prohibitory man in his place, probably a leading citizen of Western Massachusetts.

The great annual rose show is in progress at Horticultural Hall, with an extensive variety of plants. There is a large collection of orchids among them.

Most of the theaters are closed for the season, and Barnum is the leading attraction this week. Jumbo's skull is said to show the fracture where he tried to stop the locomotive.

Thursday proved to be the last session of the Legislature. No important measures were put over to the next year or were killed in order to reach this conclusion, and prorogation did not take place till evening. All day there was great interest about the state house, and vetoes were feared on several important matters. But none came. The Shanly resolve was signed, and so was the soldiers' exemption bill. On both of these matters Gov. Ames was "lobbied" hard on each side (as it would have been termed had he been a member), but he concluded to sign each, and has given to the public a statement which is intended as a defense of his action, but which will invite attack inevitably.

The Senate Thursday forenoon, by 18 to 12, refused to pass the Acton veterans' resolve over the veto, but in the afternoon, by 26 to 11, on reconsideration, passed it over the veto. The House immediately passed the resolve over the veto, 141 to 51.

The problem of a new state house, or state house enlargement, was debated at length. Finally the $2,000,000 loan bill was rejected, and an order adopted in the House for a committee to sit in the recess, consider the matter and report to the next Legislature by Feb. 1st, 1888. But the Senate rejected the order.

By 5 to 12 the Senate finally refused to reconsider its rejection of the bill to allow Athol to make water gas.

By 24 to 4 the House salary bill was rejected in the Senate, and, on reconsideration, by 24 to 12.

The state tax bill has been made up for $2,250,000.

The session was brought to a close about 11 o'clock.

"Oh! if I had only known that in time." Known what? "Known that a simple cold in the head may develop into chronic Catarrh." Well, it isn't too late, for Ely's Cream Balm will cure catarrh even after the sufferer's life has become a burden to him, and he a nuisance to his friends. It is the only radical and thoroughly scientific catarrh cure known. Not a snuff. Not a liquid. Price fifty cents. 2w13

"SAMANTHA AT SARATOGA."

Miss Marietta Holly, the distinguished humorous author known as "Josiah Allen's Wife," has just finished her new book "Samantha at Saratoga," in the inimitable mirth-provoking style of "Samantha at the Centennial," "Betsey Bobbitt," etc., and has sold the MSS. for a good round sum to Messrs. Hubbard Bros., of Philadelphia, who are employing the best humorous artists in the country to illustrate it, and propose bringing it out this spring at a popular price by subscription. Miss Holly spent all last season amid the whirl of fashion at Saratoga, and takes off its follies, flirtations, pug dogs, low neck dressing, etc., etc., in a style that is overflowing with richest humor, and must create a great sensation.

A Certainty.

Steele's Little Bile Pills are without an equal for stimulating the liver to healthy action, and creating a proper secretion of bile, thus removing from the system the germs of malaria, curing constipation, indigestion, and inducing a healthy circulation of the blood, without which no one can enjoy sound health. They are small, but effective; free from nauseating propensities and griping pains, and do not interfere in their action with the ordinary routine of daily life. Heavily sugar coated. To be had of LeGro & Lynde, for 25 cents per bottle. 1y8eow

In the morning gray and early,
When a man feels mighty surly,
Comes the fly,
Pretty fly!
And it wakes him from his sleeping
With its innocent bo-peeping,
With its buzzing and its nipping,
With its biting and its skipping,
Prevents his morning napping,
Wears him out with constant slapping;
Does the fly!
Pretty fly!
Drat the fly!

TRUE POLITENESS.

A kind heart is the first essential of true politeness. The other day we saw a poor woman, her arms laden with bundles, trying to open the lid of a street letter-box. Dozens of people jostled by her without offering to help, but presently a finely dressed young lady came along, who, with her daintily gloved hand, lifted the lid, then smiled and passed on, as if she were in the habit of being thoughtful for others. The same spirit characterized the following act, told in the Christian Advocate:—

An aged truckman bent under the weight of a big roll of carpet. His balehook fell from his hand and bounded into the gutter out of reach. Twenty idle clerks and salesmen saw the old man's predicament, and smiled at his look of bewilderment. No one ventured to help him. A fashionably dressed young woman came along, took in the situation at a glance, and, without looking to the right or left, stepped into the gutter, picked up the hook in her dainty, gloved fingers, and handed it to the man with a pleasant smile. The idlers looked at each other, and at the fair young woman. The old truckman, in a violent effort to express his thanks politely, lost his hat. It rolled into the gutter where the hook had been. This was almost too much for any woman, young or past young, but this New York girl was equal to the occasion. Into the gutter she tripped again and got the soiled hat. When she handed it to the truckman a happy smile was seen to play about her lips. "God bless ye, miss," the old man said, as the fair maiden turned her back on the idlers, and went on her way.

KEEPING BOYS AT HOME.

"How shall I keep my boys at home?" asked a motron of an aged and experienced head of a family.

"How old are they, madam?" interrogated the sage, before committing himself.

"My eldest," she replied, "is thirteen, and my baby boy will be six years old the 30th of September."

"Of course you would not like to chain them up, would you?"

"No."

"And your husband is not able to rent a circus and have it in the house the year round?"

"No; he is in very moderate circumstances."

"Well, then, I would suggest as the most economical, at the same time the most effective plan, to place patches on the boy's trowsers, make the patches of different cloth from the rest of the garment, and place them where they will be least seen when the boys are seated. This will keep them at home and may introduce sedentary and studious habits. If this fails with the youngest, tie a sunbonnet to his head—tie it tight, so he can't get it off. As long as the sunbonnet lasts he will stay at home. Nothing can coax him into society.—St. Paul Globe.

WHAT THE WHITE HOUSE COSTS.

The White House, all told, costs the country, in connection with the President, considerably over $125,000 a year. Besides the President's salary of $50,000, the estimate presented to Congress this session asked for $36,064 additional, to pay the salaries of his subordinates and clerks. His private secretary is paid $3200, his assistant private secretary, $2250, his stenographer $1800, five messengers $1200 each, a steward $1800, two door-keepers who each get $1200, four other clerks at good salaries, one telegraph operator, two ushers getting $1200 and $1400, a night usher getting $1200, a watchman at $900, and a man to take care of fires who receives $864 a year. In addition to this there is set down $8000 for incidental expenses, such as stationery, carpets and the care of the President's stables. And further on, under another heading, there is a demand for nearly $40,000 more. Of this $12,500 is for repairs and furnishing the White House, $2500 for fuel, $3000 for the greenhouse and $15,000 for gas and the care of the stables.

BESIEGING A LUNATIC.—A crazy man, by name Wetterlind, recently terrorized the Swedish of Goteburg for more than a whole week. He had locked himself in the top story of a house whence he commanded a wide sweep of street, and marked and fired at any and everybody who approached. After he shot one man dead the firemen attempted to drown him out, but could not get near enough, as the man was a dead shot. They next made iron shields to protect them in the approach, but these proved too cumbersome. An attempt to dislodge the lunatic by throwing dumb-bells charged with electricity at him, had to be abandoned. A barricade was then erected around the house by the police, and a regular siege laid to it. The lunatic stood it a week before he was starved out, and was then seized by strategy, too weak to defend himself. He had wounded a number of people from his perch during the singular campaign.—New York Sun.

THE CURFEW BELL.—The custom of ringing a nine o'clock evening bell used to be a common one in various New England towns and villages, and is still followed in many places, but the increase in population and various other causes has led to its abandonment in almost every Massachusetts town. A steam whistle blown at nine o'clock in the evening would have but few charms, but the comfortable tones of the 9 o'clock bell from the belfry of a village church carry with them a peculiar charm, and to one accustomed to the sound from infancy upward, recalls memories and scenes which are pleasantly remembered. The old Spanish bell in the tower at Nantucket is rung every twenty-four hours, and the custom has been followed so long that the island people would not consent to have it done away it. It is a harmless custom and worthy of a second thought before being set aside as an old-fashioned institution which can be dispensed with as well as not.—Southbridge Journal.

A California woman, who had $30,000 up as margin on stocks, went to her pastor and asked: "Do you think it would be wrong for me to pray for stocks to go up?" "Certainly I do," was his reply. "Well, what shall I do?" "You might pray that they shouldn't go down, ma'am.—Wall Street News.

TRUE ECONOMY.

What is economy?

No doubt this question does not strike you as a new one, nevertheless again we ask, "What is economy?"

"Economy? Why, economy is saving."

Good! Saving what?

"Money," you answer.

Always "money, money, money." Must the love of money be the active principle of the world forever? Is there nothing to be saved but money? Let me ask again, then, what is true economy? No answer. True economy is putting things (not only money, take note, but things) to their best use. Among said "things" is time ("time s money, you know"), and to a false estimate as to the value of money over that of time is due a great deal of loss of energy.

Ever since Benjamin Franklin's grandfather was a baby (and a good deal farther back than that for all we know) there has been current a story which sought to teach that for the person who habitually unties the string of such parcels as come to him, an independent fortune waits.

Knotless string is a good thing, doubtless, a habit of economy a better one, but can one judge of a man's economy by such things as this?

Now when Benjamin Franklin's grandfather was a baby, string, such as we have now, was no doubt scarce and high priced, and as such was to be valued and treasured. In these days, however, when it is to be bought for almost nothing, and the world is full to overflowing of unfinished work, to consider him as the true economist who uses half an hour or even fifteen minutes in saving the hundredth part of a five-cent ball of string, is certainly to place a false estimate upon time, which surely possesses as great a face value as any other of the world's commodities. A woman drops her needle and forthwith drops her work and gropes round on her hands and knees looking for it, not to keep it from sticking into some unwary foot, indeed, but because it would be extravagant to take another in its place. And with what satisfaction does she oome to the surface after ten or fifteen minutes. To be sure she has a "crick in her back," she has wasted ten minutes, she has torn her dress part way from the band, but she is triumphant, for she has been economical,—she has found the needle.

Economy is a great art and the world's salvation, but let judgment be exercised as to which is the true and which the false. It is from this very source of false economy that many people work themselves and others to death.

There is no economy in a man keeping insufficient and inefficient clerks, and himself work night and day to make up the deficiency, thus laying the foundation for present doctor's bills and a useless old age.

There is no economy in one woman with a large family trying to do the work which three could more easily accomplish, and thus unfit herself for everything but an early grave.

We should try to remember when teaching the most useful lessons of economy, that not only money, but heart, brain, health, time, all must be considered before we can get at a true estimate of economical living.—Ladies' Home Journal.

HAPPIEST BOY IN THE KINGDOM.

Once there was a king who had a little boy whom he loved.

He gave him beautiful rooms to live in, and pictures and toys and books. He gave him a pony to ride and a row-boat on a lake. He provided teachers that were to give him knowledge that would make him good and great.

But for all this, the young prince was not happy. He wore a frown wherever he went, and was always wishing for something he did not have.

At length, one day, a magician came to court. He saw the boy and said to the king:

"I can make your boy happy; but you must pay me a great price for telling the secret."

"Well," said the king, what you ask I will give."

So the price was paid. Then the magician took the boy into a private room. He wrote something with a white substance on a piece of paper. Next he gave the boy a candle, and told him to light it and hold it under the paper, and then see what he could read. Then he went away.

They found these words:

"Do a kindness to some one every day."

The prince made use of the secret and became the happiest boy in the kingdom.—Exchange.

TAKE LIFE IN EARNEST.

I meet with a great many persons in the course of the year, and with many whom I admire and like; but what I feel daily more and more to need, as life every year rises more and more before me in its true reality, is to have intercourse with those who take life in earnest. It is very painful to me to be always on the surface of things, and I feel that literature, science, politics, many topics of far greater interest than mere gossip or talking about the weather, are yet, as they are generally talked about, still upon the surface; they do not touch the real depth of life. It is not that I want much of what is called religious conversation—that, I believe, is often on the surface, like other conversation; but I want a sign which one catches as by a sort of masonry, that a man knows what he is about in life, whither tending, in what cause engaged; and when I find this, it seems to open my heart as thoroughly and with as fresh a sympathy as when I was twenty years younger.—Dr. Arnold.

The editor of the Dakota Argus shouts frantically for marriageable girls. Don't go; the men out there live in shanties and dugouts, and it snows in May.—Martha's Vineyard Herald.

Could a man make a shirt for $.06?" asks a writer in Harper's. Perhaps not, but he could make one worth less than $.06.—New Haven News.

"HE NEVER SMILED AGAIN."

No "hardly ever" about it. He had an attack of what people call "biliousness," and to smile was impossible. Yet a man may "smile and smile and be a villain still," still he was no villain, but a plain, blunt, honest man, that needed a remedy such as Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," which never fail to cure biliousness and diseased or torpid liver, dyspepsia and chronic constipation.

PECULIAR

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to and other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One hundred doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad; no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Be sure to get

SARSAPARILLAS, BITTERS, TONICS,

And Similar Preparations.

It is prepared with the greatest care by I. B. Thorn, who has had twenty years of acutal experience in compounding Physicians' prescriptions, and is warranted not to contain a particle of aloes or any injurious drug.

It is composed of Sarsaparilla Root, Burdock Root, Prickly Ash Bark, Mandrake Root, Golden Seal Root, Dandelion Root and the best Northern grown Hops, the proportions of which when properly combined make the best preparation in existance for curing all blood diseases.

It is the Best Tonic and Invigorator, as Hundreds can Testify.

It cures Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, General Debility, Mental and Physical Exhaustion, and Nervous Prostration.

There is no other preparation like it, and no other that has had the sale in so short a time. Its merits have sold nearly Seventeen Thousand Bottles in the last two years.

The Old Town Clock.

Upon the square in a quiet town
The court house stands, and looking down
From the tower above is the well-known face
Of the old town clock. From its lofty place
Over the tree tops swaying tall,
It patiently tells the time to all.
In summer days, from the streets below,
So close and dense the green leaves grow
Its pointing hands can scarce be seen;
But over the rustling boughs of green,
And mingled with joyous song of bird,
Its warning voice is ever heard.
Throughout each day and silent night,
While the stars o'erhead are gleaming bright,
Ever and ever sounds the bell,
And ever its lesson seems to tell,
A lesson rung with every tone,
To the midnight watcher sad and alone.
Time is fleeting,
Ne'er retreating;
Another day
Has passed away;
Gone forever,
Returning never;
Every treasure,
Every pleasure,
That it carries,
Never tarries;
Time is fleeting,
Ne'er retreating.

"Time is fleeting," but naught heed they
Who carelessly hear the bell each day;
"Ne'er retreating," the thoughtless and gay
Who make of their lives a holiday.
"Time is fleeting," but they forget
Who laden their moments without regret
As they onward fly, with earthly gaining,
With worldly care and sad complaining.
"Gone forever," the steady knell
Over and over seems to tell;
And they who dwell both far and near,
Can oft the quiet teaching hear,
As through the quaint and shady streets
The echo lingers and repeats.

Down the river that wanders along,
With a murmuring, ever-changing song,
Till its shallow waters deeper grow,
Oft float the bell-tones faint and low,
Till they startle the dreamer idly afloat,
Who tranquilly, in his gliding boat,
Drifts where the shadows and sunbeams lie,
Between the islands neath the summer sky;
And the fisherman hears them down in the bay
And the hunter notes the hour of day,
And the soft breeze lightly carries the sound
Over the marshy hunting ground,
Where the lotus flowers, with spreading leaves
A rare and antique beauty weaves.

Sadly, ah! sadly, through the air
They come to the hillside still and fair;
Over the lonely, sacred spot
Where many rest who hear them not;
Unheeded falls the echo there,
Unheeded wavers in the air,
Unheeded now, but once each tone
By them was heard, and loved, and known.
Hour after hour of their lives had been told,
Now resting together, the young and the old,
So calm, so hushed, no earthly sound
Will call them from that sleep profound.

"Gone forever!" thus the bell
Swayed in slow and solemn knell
Till its voice was stilled and the faithful hands
Of the old clock fell; and ruin stands
With drear and melancholy face
Over the once-familiar place.
With the fleeting time and into the past,
The old clock has vanished at last.

THE HEROIC MOTHER.

Among the early settlers of Kentucky was one Jonathan Wells, who located himself in a pleasant valley, not far from the Ohio river, where for a couple of years he remained in peaceful quiet, unmolested by the Indians.

One pleasant day, in early autumn, he set off for the nearest settlement, leaving his wife and a little three-years-old daughter at home, telling the former that he should probably be back by dark, and charged her, if he was not, to secure the house, and open the door to no one but himself.

In the afternoon of that day, Mrs. Wells —who, though a small, delicate woman, possessed the true spirit of a border heroine —happened to be doing something a few rods from her dwelling, when, chancing to look towards the woods surrounding the clearing, she especied a couple of savages cautiously reconnoitering the place. She thought of her husband away, her helpless little child in the house, her own lonely and almost defenseless situation, and felt ready to sink with despair; but she called on God for aid, nerved herself with a firm resolve, and walked quietly back to the dwelling, with the air and manner of one who had seen nothing to occasion the slightest alarm.

No sooner was she in the house, however, out of sight of the Indians, than, catching up her little girl, she pressed her to her heart, with maternal anguish, and prayed God to preserve her harmless, even though her own life should be sacrificed.

"What for mamma say so?" inquired the little curly-haired pet, looking up into her mother's tearful face with childish wonder.

"You must keep still, Ella, and not make the least noise, because there are wicked Indians about, and I want to hide you so they can't find you."

"Oh, mamma!"

"Hush, now! you must be a good little girl, and not cry, and not even speak to me, no matter what you hear."

"But I 'fraid Indian, mamma!"

"Then you must keep still, and they won't find you."

"Where papa?"

"Oh, would to God he were here!" cried the poor wife and mother, with a wild burst of emotion.

She then hastened to hide the child among the straw of the bed, strongly impressing it with the idea that its own constant silence, and nothing else, could save it from the hands of the wicked Indians.

This done, she turned to the window that looked in the direction where she had seen the Indians, and perceived four of them leisurely, but somewhat cautiously, approaching the house.

What was she to do? Leave the door open and let them enter, trying her own peaceful intentions to effect a like result in them? or close and bar the house, and make the best warlike defense she could?

For a few moments she was undecided which course to pursue, for there were about equally strong arguments in favor of either. Should she let them in peacefully, treat them well, and offer them a few presents, they might possibly go away without doing her any harm; or should they even kill her, or take her prisoner, seeing no one else about, they might overlook her child, and let it thus escape; and such was her maternal love, that she would have been willing to sacrifice herself to insure the safety of her offspring. On the other hand, should she bar up the door and windows, and make use of the gun and axe at her command, perhaps she could keep them out altogether, till such time as her returning husband should become apprised of the siege, who might then go and bring a force to the rescue.

Recollecting her husband's injunction while arguing with herself, she decided upon the latter course; and in less than a minute after that the dwelling was as secure against her enemies as it was possible for her to make it.

She then took down a gun that was resting on some hooks overheard, and hastily examined it. She knew how to load and fire it, even though she might not be able to sight it well.

The piece she found already loaded, and remembered having heard her husband say he had put in a large charge of buckshot; but to make doubly sure, she hastily put in some more, which she found in a leathern pouch. He had taken his favorite rifle with him; but this piece had been left, and a large horn of powder; and with this in her hands, and the certainty that she had plenty of ammunition, she felt slightly relieved from the sensation of almost utter helplessness which she had a minute before experienced.

She had put in some extra shot, as we have said, and secured them with a light wad, and was in the act of repriming the piece, with hands that trembled so as to spill some of the powder on the floor, when a loud rap sounded on the door, as if it were struck with a tomawawk.

"Who is there, and what do you want?" demanded Mrs. Wells, bracing her nerves for the severe trial which she felt was now at hand.

"Me Injun—come say how do!" replied a voice, in broken English.

"Very well, you can say that where you are."

"Squaw open—Injun want come in say how do. Injun no harm."

"No, I cannot let you in; and so, if you are good and peaceful Indians, you will go away."

"No go 'way first. Come in first—say how do—eat hominy—den go 'way."

"No, I don't know you—you may be bad Indians—and so I shall not let you in; but if you are hungry, I will give you food."

"Yes, Injun heap hungry."

Mrs. Wells hastily collected some cold meat, bread and vegetables, and, cautiously opening the window-shutter, dropped them on the ground outside.

"There is food for you," she said, as she secured the shutter; "and now if you are good Indians, you will go away."

She judged by the sounds that the savages picked up the food and ate it, and for some time she could hear them conversing in low tones among themselves.

As this affair happened at a period when the Indians were supposed to be at peace with the whites, there could be no evidence but their own actions that the present party was hostile, and therefore Mrs. Wells began to gather strong hope, now that she had fed them, that they would go quietly away and leave her in peace.

But such was not their intention—whether because they were murderously inclined, or whether they were a strong party against a weak, defenceless woman, and felt they could annoy, frighten and rob her with impunity, we are not prepared to say.

At any rate, the spokesman soon returned to the door, and, rapping loudly on it again, said:

"Injun much thank—a heap. Open door —him say good-by."

"You can say that just as well where you are," replied Mrs. Wells. "I have treated you well; and now, unless you are wicked Indians, you will go away peacefully."

"No!" rejoined the savage, in a bolder and more threatening tone; "Injun come in."

"Once for all," said the heroic little woman, anger beginning in some measure to take the place of fear, "you shall not come in! and, if you attempt it, the consequences will be on your own heads!"

"What poor squaw do?" cried the savage, in a tone of insolent contempt.

"Try it and see!" was the defiant answer.

The Indian said something to his companions in their own language, and a laugh followed. This, after a brief silence, was succeeded by a fierce whoop, or yell, that seemed to strike a chill to the very heart of that poor wife and mother, and which caused the little girl, who had till now kept perfectly quiet, to start up with a scream of terror.

"Oh, Ella, you unnerve me!" exclaimed the agonized mother, springing to and clasping the child in her arms. "Now the Indians must know you are here, and if I am mastered, you are lost. Hark!" she continued, as a succession of heavy blows fell upon the door; "the wretches are trying to cut their way in, and I must be ready for them. God help me! It is a terrible thing to take human life; but I feel it is my duty to save myself and this sweet innocent by every means in my power, and I will do it! Lay down, Ella, and keep quiet—mamma won't let the wretched Indians come to her darling!"

The little girl, as if she comprehended all that was required of her in that hour of terrible trial, nestled back into the straw, without uttering another word, leaving her mother free to act.

The blows now fell rapidly and constantly upon the door, showing that the Indians were determined upon cutting their way in; and taking up her gun, with a firm resolve to defend herself to the last, Mrs. Wells advanced and placed herself in a position to fire upon her enemies as soon as a single opening should enable her to see them.

They worked steadily and fast, and seemingly in a concert, occasionally exchanging a few words with one another, and once or twice breaking out into a light laugh, evidently showing they were not apprehensive of anything very serious. They doubtless supposed they had a poor, helpless woman in a trap, and therefore felt both courageous and careless.

With pale face, knitted brow, compressed lips, and eyes that almost glared, Mrs. Wells watched every vibration of that door under the axe of her foes; and when she perceived one particular part of the thick slabs begin to quiver and splinter and let in light, she placed the muzzle of her gun there with a firm hand, and cocked it with fingers that no longer trembled.

The blows now rained fast, and in less than a minute a hatchet struck through and opened an aperture of several square inches in extent. This success was greeted by a shout of joy, and one of the Indians put his face down to it to peer in.

He never knew what he saw; for at that instant Mrs. Wells fired, and literally blew his head to atoms, scattering his brains over his laughing companions, whose sounds of merriment suddenly changed to yells of surprise, horror, rage and dismay.

Dropping their hatchets and catching up their guns, they quickly thrust the muzzles, one after the other, through the aperture, and discharged them at random through the dwelling.

But the recoil of Mrs. Well's overloaded piece had thrown her down, and she thus escaped unharmed.

Getting upon her feet, she drew aside to a corner behind the door, and, with the coolness of a veteran, prepared to reload her gun, nerved to this state by the belief that on her presence of mind and physical exertions the safety of herself and child depended.

But at this moment of fearful trial she heard the crack of a distant rifle, followed by cries, or rather howls, of dismay from the savages about the door, who seemed to dash off as from some pursuing enemy.

Soon after there was another report and another but distant yell; and while Mrs. Wells stood listening and fairly trembling with the hope of rescue, her ears were greeted with the welcome sounds of her husband's voice.

She staggered to the door, tore down the bars, threw it open, and, with a wild shriek of joy, fell fainting upon her husband's breast.

He had returned rather sooner than he expected, and just in time to see his dwelling besieged by the party of four. While creeping up for a shot, the discharge from within, and the death of one of his foes, had cheered his almost fainting spirit, by giving him one assailant less and proving the active existence of his heroic little wife. He trembled at seeing the Indians fire into the house; but he took advantage of the act to gain a point where he could make his own aim fatal to another. As the remaining two fled, he hastily reloaded his rifle, and had the satisfaction of wounding one of these and getting into his dwelling unharmed.

The fainting wife soon revived; and father, mother and child, thus happily reunited, lived many years to thank Heaven for their wonderful deliverance from what had threatened to be a terrible fate.

CAB AND TENDER.

"He's been in the dumps because his locomotive has been 'off' for three or four days," said a railroad man at the Union depot the other day, as he pointed to an engineer who looked as sour as any dyspeptic.

'How off?"

"Go and ask him."

It took a quarter of an hour and a cigar to clear the cloud from the engineer's face, and then in reply to the query said:

"It's a queer thing. There's my engine, one of the best on the road, in perfect order, only twelve years old, and able to run with the best of them. A month ago I hadn't the least bit of trouble in making time, no matter how the track was or the weight of the train. She was ready at the word, held her steam beautifully, and seemed to understand every word I said. Today she is down in the round-house, growling and sputtering and acting as if she wanted to pick a quarrel with a gravel-pit!"

"Anything out of gear?"

"Not a thing. She's been looked over twice, and we can't find the least excuse for her conduct. She'll get over it in a day or two, perhaps. If she don't we'll punish her."

"How?"

"Put her before a freight or stock train. I've seen it tried dozens of times, and it most always worked well. Here she is now as bright as a new dollar and as handsome as a picture, and I'll bet $50 that there isn't the least thing out of order. She's simply sulking, the same as a child or a woman, and I know what started it. Three weeks ago, while on my run with the night express, she just wanted to light right out for all she was worth. She took the bit like a running horse, and if I hadn't choked her off she'd have beaten schedule time by twenty minutes. She acted mad right away, and in running twenty miles she gave me more trouble than I ever had with her in a run of three hundred. She lost steam, tried to foam over, choked her pipes, and when I wanted more steam she'd slide on her drivers. She went right back on me that night, and has been sulky ever since."

"Do all engines do this?"

"Not all, but many of them. Some of 'em begin to cut up and get on their high heels the first day out of the shop, as if determined to be master; while others will be as obedient as you please for two or three years, then, all at once, play you some rusty trick. People say that a horse is next to a man in point of intelligence, but I sometimes think the locomotive ought to have that place. We engineers do not look upon them as machines, but almost as companions, and I've known drivers to talk to them by the hour. I feel awfully down in the mouth about my pet."

"Is this your first experience with a sulking engine?"

"No; it's my third. Six years ago, when I was running out of Chicago, west, I had ten years added to my age in about two minutes. I had a fine passenger engine, and we were the best of friends for over a year. One day when we were booming over the country at forty miles an hour, I saw a farmer's team stalled at a highway crossing. He had a big load of wood on his wagon, and the team was a pair of young horses. When I first caught sight of them they were dancing up and down and not trying to pull a pound, and the old farmer was on top of the load and putting on the whip good and strong. Now I honestly believe that engine wanted to smash things. She suddenly increased her speed, and when I reversed and put on the air brakes she plunged and kicked and almost jumped the rails. When I started up again she was sulking, and I had all I could do to make time. She was 'off' all next trip, but I wouldn't give in. On the next trip she showed her teeth and they had the gleam of a lantern of death."

"You see I had orders to side-track at a certain station for the Atlantic express to pass by me, and my engine sulked and growled and threw me several minutes behind time. There was little time to spare when we reached the station. I had drawn my train about half way off the main track when my engine stopped dead still. Yes, sir—stopped dead still, and that without being reversed or a brake applied, and with steam enough to blow off! I was dazed for a minute, and the fireman opened his eyes like one seeing a terrible picture. Just then the Atlantic whistled, I jumped down expecting to see a barricade, but the track was clear. I leaped into the cab and gave her more steam, but not a wheel moved; more yet, but she stood there like a rock! Conductor, brakemen, and passengers were shouting to me, and the switchman howled like a panther. On came the Atlantic, and I pulled the throttle open wide. Bless you, sir! I'm in a shiver now at the recollection."

"The Atlantic always passed us on the fly, but that night she had a party of stockholders aboard who wanted to get off at this station, and she came to a stop and saved such a railroad slaughter as would put the Ashtabula disaster nowhere. She'd have gone through two sleeping cars as sleek as a bullet. There we stood, my engine growling and threatening and I half crazed. The fireman suddenly lit out as if he had seen a ghost, a mob of passengers swarmed down on me, and I believe I should have taken to the woods if a change hadn't come. All at once No. 40 seemed to rear right up, she made a plunge or two, and away she went like a bolt of lightning, and I had the hardest kind of work to stop her on the siding.

"They didn't say I was drunk, and they knew I wasn't asleep, but they suspended me until they looked the engine over. She was in perfect order, and they sent her out on the accommodation with a new driver. What did she do but bang right into a train at a station and that with all the steam shut off and the bar thrown over! Some folks laugh at us and call it superstition, but they never lived in an engine-cab. Ask any horse-trainer if his horse will make the same time any two mornings alike, even if the care and feed and track are the same. Out of twenty locomotives built in the same shop by the same gang of men, no two will work the same. One may be bulldozed, another must be petted, a third will be faithful, a fourth treacherous, and each one will have her peculiar traits and tricks. I'd no more take out one of these engines without knowing the peculiarities than you'd try to jump across that pit. I'd be all in a tremble for fear she'd ditch the whole train. No, sir. They are as near human as machinery can be made, and the more human you treat them the better for both. Some can be coaxed, some must be punished, some need watching, and once in a while you find one which will dodge danger, keep her time and run herself while you dream of the curly-heads tucked up in bed at home."

COPIOUS DRAUGHTS OF ICE WATER.

Habitual ice water drinkers are usually flabby about the region of the stomach. They complain that the food lies heavy on that patient organ. They taste their dinners hours after it is bolted. They cultivate the use of stimulants to aid digestion. If they are intelligent they read up on food and what the physiologists have to say about it—how long it takes cabbage and pork and beet and other esculents to go through the process of assimilation. They roar at new bread and hot cakes and fried meat, imagining these to have been the cause of their maladies. But the ice water goes down all the same. The growing use of ices, and custom of taking ice water or other very cold drinks or food, as ice-cream, cannot but prove unfavorable to health, especially when one has low vital power, with insufficient power of the stomach to react and restore the degree of heat actually demanded that digestion may proceed naturally. Digestion is arrested as soon as the temperature of the stomach falls below ninety degrees Fahrenheit, and when cold drinks are taken by the weak, at least some considerable time must elapse before it is restored; in some instances hours, attended by great waste of power and a derangement of the stomach. Cold drinks also excite and inflame the throat, causing an artificial thirst never satisfied by drinks, to say nothing of the danger of contracting colds by this unnatural chilling of the stomach, often followed by bowel derangement, inflammation of the stomach, and by still worse ailments.

A young clerk was shut six hours in a refrigerator the other day, imprisoned by accident. When at last he was released, he said he felt just as though he had been attending a sociable at a fashionable church. —Hartford Journal.

How Easy It Is.

How easy it is to spoil a day!
The thoughtless words of cherished friends,
The selfish act of a child at play,
The strength of will that will not bend,
The sleight of a comrade, the scorn of a foe,
The smile that is full of bitter things—
They all can tarnish its golden glow
And take the grace from its airy wings.

How easy it is to spoil a day
By the force of a thought we did not check!
Little by little we mould the clay,
And little flaws may the vessel wreck.
The careless waste of a white-winged hour,
That held the blessing we long had sought,
The sudden loss of wealth or power—
And lo! the day is with ill inwrought.

How easy it is to spoil a life—
And many are spoiled ere well begun—
In home life darkened by sin and strife
Or downward course of a cherished one;
By toil that robs the form of its grace
And undermines till health gives way;
By the peevish temper, the frowning face,
The hopes that go and the cares that stay.

A day is too long to be spent in vain;
Some good should come as the hours go by—
Some tangled maze may be made more plain,
Some lowered glance may be raised on high.
And life is too short to spoil like this,
If only a prelude it may be sweet;
Let us bind together its thread of bliss
And nourish the flowers around our feet

WHY WILL THEY.

Why will people continue to do the the things that are to their disadvantage? This is a problem that has puzzled us for a long time.

Why will a man with a mouth like the entrance to the Mammoth cave shave his face smooth, when by allowing his beard to grow he might conceal the opening he so unhesitatingly offers to the world.

Why will a short woman always wear plaids, which make her look even shorter and more dumpy? And why do tall women take naturally to stripes?

Look about you when you take a walk down one of our fashionable streets, and notice the fact that the plainest-faced women wear the most striking costumes, as if they hoped by gaudy colors in dress to make amends for undue length of noses and excess of freckles and pimples.

Short, fat women wear fur-lined circulars, almost to an individual; and tall, lean women affect short walking jackets, and look like liberty poles with night-gowns on.

Long-necked women invariably "do" their hair in a French twist, so as to let all creation observe the fact that their necks are long; and short-necked women stick to frogs on the napes of their necks, and from behind present the appearance of their heads resting on their shoulders.

Small, short men appear in tall hats, under the impression that the tile adds to their height, while in reality it gives them the appearance of a hat walking off with a man. One sees a great deal more hat, proportionately, than he sees man.

Why will women go shopping after samples that they never will buy anything like, and know that they shall not?

Why will people run down every other religion but their own? They know they never make any converts by so doing.

Why can two of a trade never agree?

Why does a young man, when he is going a-courting, act as if he were doing something he were ashamed of?

Why do old people so hate to see young people enjoy themselves?

What makes everybody like to hear of bad luck coming to somebody else?

There are good souls in the world who will say that they do not enjoy anything of the kind, and perhaps they think so; but just let a scandal arise affecting the minister of "the other church," and see how active those very same good souls will be to find out every minute particular!

Why do boys like to break glass, and stone cats, and tie tin dippers to dogs' tails? Why do men like to see a runaway? Why does everybody in a crowded railway car watch the woman who has a crying baby? Has she not enough to contend with without feeling conscious that every man, woman and old maid, who knows about as much concerning a baby as an elephant knows about frying doughnuts, is looking at her, and wondering why she doesn't do this, and why she doesn't do that?

Why do dyspeptics keep on eating baked beans? Why do fat people, who agonize over adipose tissue, keep on eating candy and using sugar.

Why does a person with "poor calculation" hover over a hot stove, and make the circulation aforesaid still poorer?

Why do men marry women unfitted for them, and bewail their fate forever afterward? Why does a girl unite herself for life to a man who she knows drinks, and then spends her life-time in groaning over her lamentable misfortune?

Why do they do it!

We have asked the questions, but we are no nearer answering any of them than we were at the beginning.—Kate Thorn in New York Weekly.

ESTIMATING MEASURES.

A pint of water weighs nearly 1 pound, and is equal to 27 cubic inches, or a square box 3 inches long, 3 inches wide and 3 inches deep.

A quart of water weighs nearly 2 pounds, and is equal to a square box of about 4x4 inches and 3½ inches deep.

A gallon of water weighs from 8 to 10 pounds, according to the size of the gallon, and is equal to a box 6x6 inches square and 6.7 or 7½ inches deep.

A peck is equal to a box 8x8 inches square and 8 inches deep.

A bushel almost fills a box 12x12 inches square and 24 inches deep, or 2 cubic feet.

A cubic foot of water weighs nearly 64 pounds, (more correctly 62½ pounds), and contains 7 to 8 gallons, according to the kind of gallons used.

A barrel of water almost fills a box 2x2 feet square and 1½ feet deep, or 6 cubic feet.

Petroleum barrels contain 40 gallons, or nearly 5 cubic feet.

He now has two such cases, and is likely to have several more unless parents exercise a little judicious authority in the matter.

MAYOR HEWITT of New York is the most wide-awake and fearless official that city has had in many a day. He tackles corruption and abuses right and left, entirely regardless of whose corns he may tread on, and he bids fair to a make wonderful improvement in the administration of public affairs. Just now he is after the Staten Island ferry-boats, which are sinners rather above the others in the matter of overcrowding,and he follows up a note of warning by a threat to annul their lease if adequate accommodations are not provided.

GEN. BUTLER replies to a charge of selling rebel church bells in New England that when he assumed command at New Orleans he found a public square full of these bells, which had been contributed to the rebel cause, to be melted into cannon, and deciding that they were contraband of war he sent them North as ballast in government transports. They were subsequently sold at auction. The general has sins enough to answer for, doubtless, but his management at New Orleans was of just about the right sort for the times and the people.

ACCORDING to recent statistics missionaries are needed not alone in foreign fields, but there is an abundance of work for them yet right here at home. The total membership of Christian churches in the United States is 15,772,800, or, adding a liberal estimate for the churches not enumerated, say 16,500,000 all told. With a national population of 60,000,000 we therefore have 43,500,000 men, women and children in this country who are members of no church. Of this number, according to the usual reckoning, 17,400,000, or two-fifths of the whole number, are adults. This is not a pleasant, nor an encouraging exhibit, though not a strange one, perhaps, when we consider the hordes of foreigners poured into the country every year, from nations more godless than ours, and who assimilate but slowly with us; but there is plainly a great work for the churches to do in bringing our own people to a knowledge of the truth. The church membership is divided among the different denominations as follows: Methodist Episcopal, 4,346,516; Roman Catholic, 4,000,000; Baptist, 3,682,207; Presbyterian, 1,082,432; Lutheran, 930,830; Congregational, 436,379; Episcopal, 430,-531; Reformed, 259,974; German Evangelical, 125,000; Christian Union, 120,000; Friend, 105,000; Adventist, 97,711; Mennonites, 80,000; Church of God, 45,000, non-Episcopal Methodist, 18,750; Moravian, 10,-686.

The Palmer Savings Bank pays a 2 per cent semi-annual dividend to-day. E. Brown succeeds R. L. Goddard on the board of trustees.

A covered carriage was overturned at the east end of the Main street bridge Sunday evening by careless driving, but no serious damage resulted.

Miss Pearl Lawton entertained about a hundred of her young friends at her home on Park street Tuesday afternoon, the occasion being her tenth birthday.

Palmer Lodge of Odd Fellows elected these officers last Friday evening: N. G., Charles E. Fuller: V. G., Fred O. Caryl; R. S., C. L. Alexander; P. S., R. J. Henry; treasurer, J. H. Smith.

Wren's mammoth tent show, presenting "Uncle Tom's Cabin," with two Topsys, two Marks, bloodhounds, trick donkeys, etc., will exhibit on the old circus ground, back of Park street, next Wednesday.

A woman with a young child in her arms made a visit to the signal tower at the railroad crossing one day this week, saying she wanted some photographs taken, and the boys are now having lots of fun with Dan.

At a business meeting of the Congregational church last evening W. A. Breckenridge and C. W. Bennett were chosen deacons, and it was voted to continue the communion service at the same hour as at present.

A tramp who agreed to work for his breakfast and dinner at the Converse House yesterday morning skipped out after breakfast, leaving the work undone. It is always safest to make such fellows work before they eat.

The Endeavor Society of the Congregational church will hold their consecration meeting on Sunday at 6.30 p. m. Subject: "Reconsecration." All who are obliged to be absent are expected to send at least a brief letter.

In addition to the special song service, which the choir of the Congregational church had arranged for last Sunday, the Misses Fairchild of Belchertown were present, as accompanists with violin and cornet, adding greatly to the service.

Charles Squier, who for several years has been a successful manufacturer of ice cream in Monson, has opened rooms in the Nassowanno block store recently vacated by T. J. Sullivan, and will attend to the wants of all who may wish a first-class article.

In our supplement this week will be found a full account of the dedication of Monson academy Wednesday. Send a copy to any friends of the school who were not able to be there. Extra copies can be had of all newsdealers and at this office, or will be mailed to any address at five cents each.

The corn doctor who tried to start up his business on Main street Wednesday evening was given a warm reception. The boys were just getting a little of the Fourth of July fever, and whenever the peddler attempted to speak he was pelted with fire crackers, and was finally forced to give up business. A hand-organ man also shared the same treatment.

He was a negro of rather uncouth appearance; he stopped in front of a Main street building listening to a young lady vocalist within. One of the young lady's friends noticed his rapt attention, and approached him with the remark: "That's beautiful, isn't it?" Just then the amateur prima donna reached for a high note, but missed it, and the listener replied: "Yes; it's heavenly music, but a —— noise."

The New London Northern road will put on the Block Island train to-morrow morning. It will leave Amherst at 5.50 a. m., and Palmer at 6 55, making no stops between Stafford Springs and South Coventry. Returning, the train will leave New London at 5 30 p. m., reaching Palmer about 8, and leaving for Amherst at 8 25. The fare is the same as last year—$2.65 one way; $2.90 for round trip, good for one day; $4 25 for round trip, good for the season.

The children of the state primary school will celebrate the Fourth in the usual manner next Monday. There will be a salute from the guns at 5 a. m., then a visit to the village, to the horribles parade. In the forenoon there will be tub races and a greased pole contest, and sack, potato, three-legged and other races in the afternoon, and fireworks in the evening, while a dinner of unusually good things will be served at noon. The public is invited to attend the races in the afternoon.

The athletic sports on the park last Saturday afternoon did not draw a very large audience. The race between P. J. Murphy and a trotting horse did not come off, because the horse cast a shoe on his way to the track, and his owner would not trot him without it. The hurdle race between P. J. Murphy and J. J. O'Brien of Orange was won by O'Brien. Murphy got there first, but knocked down two poles. A good deal of money changed hands on this event, and as it is claimed that the Murphy faction lost some $500, there is some talk of another race.

The prize declamations of the high school scholars took place at the Congregational church this afternoon with this programme:

An unusual amount of enthusiasm is being shown in the parade of antiques and borribles on the morning of the Fourth. Parties from the other villages will join the procession, and a large number of children from the state primary school will also take part. A large number of local hits are promised, and no doubt the display will be a good one. The route of march will be as follows: From Point of Rocks to agricultural park, countermarch to Church street, through Church to Pleasant, to Pearl, to Park, to Thorndike, to Pine, to Squier, to Knox avenue, to Foster avenue, to Pleasant, to Church, to Main, to Point of Rocks, where the procession will disband. A subscription paper has been passed around with good success, and there will be fireworks in the evening.

The sale of seats for the high schoo benefit at the Congregational church this evening has been a large one, and a good audience is assured. The combination is a good one. The Temple quartette needs no recommendation to Palmer people, while Mr. Powers comes most highly recommended. The programme:

QUARTETTE. "On the Breeze." Adam
TEMPLE QUARTETTE.
MR. POWERS. ACT. I. "DAVID GARRICK"
PART SONG. "Summer Night." Buck
TEMPLE QUARTETTE.
MR. POWERS. ACT II. "DAVID GARRICK"
ENGLISH GLEE. "Jack Horner." Coldicott
TEMPLE QUARTETTE.
MR. POWERS. ACT. III. "DAVID GARRICK."
SERENADE. "Sleep in Peace." Genee

Ralph Thurston, tenement inspector for the Thorndike Co., was married Thursday at 8 p. m., to Nellie H. Searle of Southampton. The bride has taught some time at the upper village school. The happy couple go to the groom's home in Maine for a short visit.

WEST WARREN.

D. N. Ricker, overseer of the finishing room at the mills, is very sick with inflammation of the bowels.

The main line of shafting in the dye house broke Wednesday afternoon and caused considerable delay.

James C. Grant, overseer of weaving in Nos. 1 and 3 mills, has been taking a vacation at Newport, R. I., this week.

Noah Elwell, one of the oldest residents, died at his home on Main street Wednesday evening. He had been ill for some time, but it was not thought he was dangerously so.

The villages are promised another picnic to-morrow, when nines from Nos. 1 and 3 mills will struggle for the supremacy. Another scheme on foot is a game between the overseers and second hands for a supper.

Arrangements have been completed to have Rev. Hugh Montgomery preach at a union service in the M. E. church next Sunday morning. In the afternoon he will speak on temperance at Warren, and will address a mass meeting in the Congregational church at West Warren in the evening.

The picnic in Crossman's grove last Saturday was well attended, and will net the society a handsome sum. Henry Labrie and John Connor raced for the greased pig, but Labrie caught the animal. Julia Rattell and a man named Murphy took the prizes for dancing, a silver watch and a gold medal. Fireworks closed the day's sport.

THREE RIVERS.

William Mason is enlarging his barn.

Mrs. F. A. Bowen and family are at Willimantic.

The L. Hilton property on Prospect street, including the greenhouse, was sold at auction Tuesday, to Owen F. McMahon, for $5000.

A hard thing to find these days—a drunken man—while before the first of May one could hardly be on the street without seeing one or more.

Henry Fitzgerald, 12 years of age, and Joseph Goodrich, 16 years of age, were arrested Monday evening while stealing bottled beer or soda from E. E. Cleveland's cellar.

Calvin H. Morse, a Ware boy of great ability as a writer, who, in days past has been a valued contributor to the STANDARD, is now editor of the Lusk, Wyoming, Herald.

There has been about $100 collected to pay expenses of the parade on the morning of the Fourth. Prizes are to be given to the two most horrible make-ups in the procession.

Orson, son of Malcom Campbell, was seriously injured Wednesday by having a large stone fall on his leg. No bones were broken, but he was so badly bruised that he will be unable to walk for some weeks.

The old wood sheds in the rear of Guild's block have been removed this week to make room for a large addition to Bryson's dry goods store. It is to be two stories, and will give an additional 3000 feet of floor space to what is already the largest store in town.

A. M. Morin is in town again this week, but sails for Paris on Saturday. His brother, John P. Morin, is to join him in business and sails the last of July. He is selling out his furniture and other personal property at bargains.

One of our public-spirited citizens proposes to present the town with four drinking fountains, two to be for man and beast. One is to be located near the depots, the other near the west end of Water streets and two, without the cattle attachment, to be located on Main street.

F. P. Clark & Co. are talking of putting in a Benham hydraulic elevator for passengers and freight, to run from the basement to their extensive furniture wareerooms in the upper story. If this is done, customers will be saved the task of climbing two large flights of stairs to inspect their stock.

The picnic in Eaton's Grove the 4th promises to be the grandest affair Ware has seen for many years. Both bands and an orchestra have been engaged to furnish music, and a large committee appointed, which is enthusiastic to have the affair pass off in a manner to give pleasure to all who attend.

The graduating exercises of the Ware high school were held in the town hall last evening, which was well filled. The scenery and stage settings are so fine that but little attempt was made to decorate the platform as in years past. There were, however, several fine growing plants tastefully arranged, and a large arch of evergreen with a keystone of daisies bearing the class motto, "Inceptum Non Perfectum," and '87. At the left of the stage were seated the school committee. The principal of the school and his assistant, the music teacher, and the speakers of the evening, aside from the graduates, Nellie May Ruggles,Anna Augusta Fenn,Hattie Mabel Coney, Clarence Leslie Roberts, were seat-beneath the evergreen arch in the rear, while the other members of the school were seated on the right. The exercises were opened by prayer by Rev. A. T. Perry, when the programme was performed in a most creditable manner. The singing, which was excellent, was under the direction of Miss Grace S. Corliss, teacher of music in our public schools. Henry C. Davis, Esq., presented the diplomas, previous to which he made a few well timed remarks. Alluding to the work of the Ware high school, he spoke of the translation of the motto of this year as "Begun but not finished," speaking of those who attended when the school-room was on the site of our beautiful town hall, who have now been scattered, those who are living the wide world over, and spoke of them wherever heard from as men and women of standing, ability and good reputation. He closed his remarks by heartily thanking the principal and his assistants for their earnest, efficient conscientious work for the good of the school.

The graduating class of the high class is to have a class dinner at the Hampshire House next Tuesday evening.

MASSACHUSETTS AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Twenty-five years ago Congress passed the Morrill act establishing agricultural schools in the different states, and the event was duly celebrated at Amherst last week during the commencement at the Agricultural College. A commemorative address was delivered Wednesday morning by President Adams of Cornell, and Judge Davis of Plymouth gave a historical address, showing the progress of agricultural education since 1824. President Atherton of the Pennsylvania State College, Dr. Sturtevant of the New York Experiment Station, James Draper of the Massachusetts Granger, and Secretary Smith of the Rhode Island Agricultural Society were among the speakers at the alumni dinner. A picture of ex-President Stockbridge was unveiled; battalion drill and dress parade occurred at 5 p. m.

Gov. Ames presented diplomas to a graduating class of 78, one of the largest classes the college has sent out. The new president of the alumni is Dr. J. M. Benedict of Waterbury, Ct. Prof. Maynard is secretary. The candidates for trustees are Geo. H. Snow of Leominster and James Draper of Worcester. The number of candidates examined for admission Thursday was larger than ever before, with one exception. The college is in condition to attract students. It is well equipped with instructors and buildings. The course of instruction includes something in agriculture during the whole course, botany and horticulture being taught during the spring and fall terms to the three lower classes. The natural sciences have a large place in the curriculum, as do mathematics and drawing. Latin, French and literature receive due attention; military drill under a regular army officer is required through the entire course. The college has admirable facilities for object teaching in farming and horticulture. There are 80 scholorships, state senators having the disposal of two each. They provide for the payment of tuition and other charges while the holder is a member of the institution. Any young man in the state who desires such a scholarship will do well to confer with the senator in his district. Failing there, he may apply direct to the faculty. The next examination is at Amherst, Sept. 6th, the term beginning the 7th. Candidates must be over 14 and understand the common branches; United States history, algebra to quadratics and the metric system.

A CARD. We the undersigned desire to express our grateful acknowledgments to the many friends and neighbors who have since the recent accident and other sickness in the family, by their numerous acts of kindness, not only materially relieved them of the inconvenience attending the long confinement, but have placed them under great indebtedness for the kind attention and thoughtful courtesy.

Mr. and Mrs. C. D. FOSTER.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, June 29th, 1887.

Probably no part of this country is better supplied with information in regard to the troubles in the Sandwich Islands than the office of the American Board in the Congregational House in Somerset street. Before the dispatches from San Francisco were sent, telling to the people what imminent danger of revolution there was in the rotten kingdom of the vicious and depraved Kalakaua,it was known at the board rooms, through their constant correspondence from Honolulu, that there was a rapidly growing discontent. One of the officers remarked before the papers had published a word of the trouble, that there was no escape from revolution, if matters went on as they had been going lately. At this juncture, too, comes the proposition to re-establish a mission of the board at Honolulu. It is made by the son and daughter of an old missionary who have presented their case so well to the officers of the board that a missionary will be sent out as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made. Some 220 descendants of missionaries still live on the islands, and they are something like a community here in their moral status; that is, some of them are church members and some of them are not. The islands were abandoned years ago by the board as a mission station, because they were regarded as so far Christianized that they could be left to care for themselves. But the influx of great numbers of Chinese and the everlasting effect of the luxurious climate have been so adverse that the need of more missionary help is now felt.

Mr. Henry H. Faxon, the ardent temperance reformer and Quincy policeman, who was lately compelled to pay $440 damages for violence in the arrest of a man for breaking the liquor law, thinks he has got preetty good evidence that the jury was influenced by personal spite against him, and meant to punish him for his temperence activity. He is not through with the affair yet, and certainly he will have much support if he is to be persecuted for that reason. Lately he has not done much with politics, and is more interested in showing up the evils of the jury system. For years he has kept a scrap book of newspaper clippings upon this point alone and he has prepared an article against the jury system, every fact of which he can support by evidence taken from recent current events in this country. These facts make out a strong case against the system as far more likely to result in injustice and wrong than in justice. It is persons who want to escape punishment who are most likely to insist upon a jury trial, while men who want justice avoid it if possible. Mr. Faxon thinks that Gov. Ames will have a hard rub to be elected this year, because he made no reference in his inaugural to the constitional prohibition.

Mr. Henry L. Pierce, who has been in years past one of the leading Republicans of the state, but last year supported John F. Andrew for governor, says that Leopold Morse could probably defeat Gov. Ames. Others here say that the strongest ticket against Ames and Bracket would be Stearns and Howard. Frank K. Foster of Haverhill seems to be thrown over by the Democrats because he supported George E. McNeal for mayor of Boston against Mayor O'Brien, and he is now still trying to rally the defeated cause of the Knights of Labor in his paper, the Labor Leader. Of the collapsed Worcester county strike he says "But if the men of Worcester are what we think they are, brave, plucky and pertinent, it will not be many months ere the 19 will have an opportunity to accept another gage of battle from an organization perfected and well supplied with the necessities of war." All which shows that Frank K. has opinions different from what he would have were he a participant in the strike, instead of the voluble editor of a labor paper. I do not hear anything yet of attempts by the Knights to dictate to either of the political parties, but so far as there is any expression it is that the order is inevitably fallen apart from its own weight, and that its leaders have been men on the make for support and for power, with no particular sympathy with the poor fellows who have trusted them to their own hurt.

The chief examiner of the civil service commission, Mr. Henry Sherwin, speaking of the new soldiers' exemption law, says that under the old law the commission always looked out for the interest of the soldiers and certified them to the appointing power wherever it was possible. The new law, he says, will not help the soldiers at all, unless they have political prestige with them. Appointing officers who insist upon having capable men will still go to the civil service commission for them. They will take none who have not passed an examination. Consequently soldiers who avoid the examinations will stand no chance, and as to other places, only those soldiers will be appointed who have political influence behind them.

An illustration of this occurred before Mr. Sherwin said it in the case of Col. E. P. Loring of Fitchburg, who has lately been appointed and confirmed as auditor of county accounts under the new law. The colonel says that he proposes to get his two clerks from the civil service commission, from men who have been examined and have shown that they have a fitness for the place. As he is to inaugurate the office it is important that he should put in capable men, and it is also significant that he takes this step so soon after the soldiers' exemption bill was passed. He has taken an office in the Commonwealth building, and has already sent out circulars to officers affected by the law with suggestions as to the time of making up their accounts.

President Boardman of the Senate denies the charges that he packed the Senate part of the committee on towns so as to favor the division of Beverly. He takes up in detail the charges of "Essex" against him and makes a good defense, leaving his accuser in an awkward position.

The West End scheme continues to have a lively public interest here, although the price of the stock is away down below where it was when the bill passed the Legislature. One of the latest propositions to be made under its franchise is for the construction of iron tunnels under the leading streets.

The colored brethren are getting the idea into their heads that they must have more political recognition. There are about 5000 colored voters in the whole state, and some 500 to 600 in the fifth Suffolk district, which takes in Wards 9, 10 and 11 of Boston, where most of the wealthy people live and which has 10,637 voters by the census of 1885. Yet they want the next senator, in place of Senator Wilbur, or they want a member of the Republican state committee. I submit that this will strike the people as being rather forward, considering their numbers.

On Sunday Edward Everett Hale preached the last sermon in his church at the South End. The society has bought a lot opposite Gov. Ames's on Commonwealth avenue, and will build there.

Electric light cables are being put two feet under ground in Boston, and the work is making fair progress. LANDON.

In the July HARPER'S the strongest article is the opening one on "A Printed Book," which makes a proper sequel to the June article on "A Sheet of Paper," in the series of Great American Industries. With admirable conciseness, and yet with cyclopædia thoroughness, R. R. Bowker indicates the various substitutes for printing in the ages before Gutenberg, and the steps which prepared the way for the European invention of movable type which has revolutionized the world. All the departments of labor combining to produce the modern miracle of a printed book are clearly explained: the manufacture of type, the compositor's work, the preparation for the press by stereotyping or electrotyping, the printing-presses, with the secrets of their operation, the folding, stitching, and binding. Of course the most essential portion of the subject is the evolution of the printing-press from the early embryonic hand-machine to the magical Hoe cylinder-presses, which perform the feat of printing "four, six, eight, ten, or twelve page papers of various sizes, six, seven, and eight columns in width, delivering the same, cut at the top, pasted down the centre margin, folded as desired, counted in lots at a speed from 12,000 to 72,000 perfect newspapers per hour, depending on the size and number of papers to be printed." The less familiar subject of engraving is also fully unfolded, and the various styles of reproduction which have recently been developed for the uses of illustrated publications. The Typographical Union and the economic features of printing have their share of attention. Twenty illustrations render the article peculiarly attractive and valuable.

The ECLECTIC has a fine steel engraving as a frontispiece, being the beginning of a new volume, the 46th. It is almost superfluous to enlarge on the excellencies of this publication, containing, as it does, month by month, the choicest selection from the foreign, specially the English, magazines and reviews. In spite of the great competition at home in magazines, the Eclectic holds its place. The present number sustains the reputation of the magazine. Among the contributors are Richard Jefferies, Walter Pater, George J. Romanes, Sir Francis Hastings Doyle, Albert Shaw, W. H. Mallock, Lord Byron (a hitherto unpublished fragment), Lord Brabazon, and Sir William Wilson Hunter, K.C.S.I. Articles of special inierest are "Nature and Books," "The American State and the American Man," "Mental Differences between Men and Women," "Infant Railroads," "An Apology for Armies," and "Wealth and the Working Classes," by W. H. Mallock, a continuation from the May number. Mr. Romanes has a most searching and subtle study of men and women and their differences, which will provoke great interest and sharp controversy in these days of so-called emancipated womanhood. A very entertaining paper is that of a French critic, Francis Paul, on the great French idol, Victor Hugo. In this M. Paul makes a sharp attack on the extravagant claims made for Victor Hugo. The whole number is of marked interest.

ST. NICHOLAS has a strongly patriotic flavor, appriate to the Fourth of July. Even the Brownies become imbued with the prevalent enthusiasm, and celebrate the day at night. Miss Jessie C. Glasier, a new writer, contributes an amusing sketch of negro child-life, called "A Gunpowder Plot," which is capitally illustrated by E. W. Kemble. Miss Lilian Dynevor Rice presents "A Fourth of July Record" in bright and clever verse. "Betty's Sunday,"—charmingly illustrated by R. B. Birch—carries us back to the War of 1812, and tells of a brave little American girl's adventures with the enemy. The installment of "Winning a Commission," too, —with its pictures of cadet life at West Point,—falls in line with these timely attractions of the number.

Frank R. Stockton follows his last month's paper on "King London" with an equally entertaining description of life "In English Country," charac teristic scenes of which Alfred Parsons and Harry Fenn show in several delightful drawings. H. H. Boyesen commences a new "Tale of Two Continents," entitled "Fiddle-John's Family," the frontiepiece by George Wharton Edwards forming the principal illustration.

The tourist of to-day, whether in English country with Stockton, in Norway with Boyesen, or at home in America, is not completely equipped without his camera, his outfit, and—a knowledge of their use. Alexander Black, an amateur with a professional's experience, gives, in "The Amateur Camera," some useful hints to his fellow-amateurs who have not his experience—the sort of advice that is not found in the books.

"Juan and Juanita" are conducted by Miss Baylor through another series of adventures; and James Otis tells how the boarders in "Jenny's Boarding-house" recovered from the effects of the fire and made a startling discovery.

Charles G. Leland has an article on "Bead and Wire Inlaying," there are Jingles by Mrs. Bellows, Margaret Vandegrift, and N. P. Babcock, and poems by F. D. Sherman, George Cooper, Henry Tyrrell, Anna M. Pratt, Clara G. Dolliver, and others.

This is the testimony of two generations: Pond's Extract cures all Inflammations and Bleedings. Avoid dealers who offer base imitations.

A GREAT DETECTIVE STORY.

The Boston Daily Globe announces that it will begin the publication, July 5th, of one of the most remarkable detective stories ever written, entitled, "Stolen Millions; or, The Great Bank Robbery." This story is by the most famous detective in this country, Inspector Byrnes of New York, assisted by one of the most famous novelists of the day, Julian Hawthorne. Orders for extra Globes containing this story are being received hourly at the Boston Globe office. Tell your newsdealer not to forget you.

A CHICAGO MINING INVESTMENT.

The subscription books of the Tortilita Gold and Silver Mining Company will remain open at the office of the company, 57 Broadway, New York, only a few days longer. The stock is being rapidly taken by parties in this country and by syndicates representing foreign capital, on whose behalf the property has been examined by experts, who report it one of the best ever placed on the market.

Even with the present limited facilities for working the mines they are earning handsomely, and dividends will commence in September. The stock is listed on the Consolidated Exchange, where it will soon be placed on the call. It was pronounced by the Listing Committee as being one of the best stocks ever presented to them. In none of these mines has the ore yielded less than $8 per ton, and it runs as high as $5,000 per ton. The mines are twelve in number, all developed and productive, and are located in the Owl's Head Mining District, Pinal County, Arizona, ten miles from the Southern Pacific Road. The mines cover 250 acres, with a belt of ore three miles long. The supply of rich ore is practically inexhaustible. Prospectus will be mailed on application.

ENGLAND CREDITS AMERICA WITH THE MOST SUCCESSFUL RELIEF FOR DEAFNESS.

LONDON, July 1.—At the test recently made with different devices for the relief of deafness, gathered from all parts of the world, the verdict was unanimously in favor of the invention of H. A. Wales of Bridgeport, Conn., as in many cases where all others failed this device was successful.

The best medical writers claim that the successful remedy for nasal catarrh must be non-irritating, easy of application, and one that will, by its own action, reach all the remote sores and ulcerated surfaces. The history of the efforts to treat catarrh during the past few years obliges us to admit that only one remedy has completely met these conditions, and that is Ely's Cream Balm. This safe and pleasant remedy has mastered catarrh as nothing else has ever done, and both physicians and patients freely concede this fact. The more distressing symptoms quickly yield to it.

THE GREAT TORTILITA MINES.

[From the New York Tribune, May 29, 1887.]

Ex-Governor Rodman M. Price of New Jersey, the California pioneer for whom the Legislature of that state recently appropriated $80,000 to erect a monument in recognition of his public service, is in town. As a Lieutenant of the Navy, Governor Price took possession of California in the name of the United States. He has long been identified with the interests of the Pacific slope. Asked his opinion of the Tortilita Mines in Arizona, whose offices are at 57 Broadway, this city, and whose shares are about to be listed, and are attracting much attention, Governor Price said: "I am familiar with the country in which the Tortilitas are located. They are in the central and best part of the territory and in an enormously rich mining district. The company has 12 mines, and owns a territory three miles long, with over 250 acres of rich ore deposits. The Tortilitas have already produced over $150,000 in bullion. I expect to see a second Virginia City established there, and another Comstock in the results of the mines. The value of the Tortilitas is demonstrated by the concentration of the ore below the water level in the two mines which are now being worked, which is the absolute test of permanency. They have a vein of ore already exposed, 42½ feet wide, that assays $50 per ton, and the supply is inexhaustible. "Am I acquainted with the management?" Yes. It is composed of reliable, competent business men of the highest standing. The president is Mr. Joseph H. Reall, president of the American Agricultural and Dairy Association, with whom I was for many months identified in the passage of the national oleomargarine law, and the vice-president is Gen. J. Floyd King of Louisiana, a distinguished officer in the late war, and for nine sessions (eight years), a member of congress. The superintendent of the mines, D. T. Elmore, upon whom much devolves, is indorsed by Senator Sawyer of Wisconsin as one of the best mining men in America, and of absolute integrity and capacity. There is a great future for this enterprise, in my judgment. I regard the Tortilitas as one of the best properties ever placed on the New York market, and experienced operators and mining men coincide in my opinion. I foresee great activity in mining stocks this summer.

For a time my life was despaired of. My trouble was with the Kidneys, Liver and Bladder—also Constipation. Finally I used Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and in my opinion it saved my life. I make this statement to save those who suffer as I did.—A. J. Gifford, Lowell, Mass. Druggists; $1. Send 2-cent stamp to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y., for his book on Kidney, Liver and Blood disorders. Mention this paper. 4w11

of the Grand Army of the Republic, Major George S. Merrill. Few remedies are better known in this vicinity than Sulphur Bitters; their sale has been very general throughout this section, and the number of reliable and well attested cases of beneficial results and recovery by their use, is large and beyond dispute. 2w13

"Oh! if I had only known that in time." Known what? "Known that a simple cold in the head may develop into chronic Catarrh." Well, it isn't too late, for Ely's Cream Balm will cure catarrh even after the sufferer's life has become a burden to him, and he a nuisance to his friends. It is the only radical and thoroughly scientific catarrh cure known. Not a snuff. Not a liquid. Price fifty cents. 2w13

"SAMANTHA AT SARATOGA."

Miss Marietta Holly, the distinguished humorous author known as "Josiah Allen's Wife," has just finished her new book "Samantha at Saratoga," in the inimitable mirth-provoking style of "Samantha at the Centennial," "Betsey Bobbitt," etc., and has sold the MSS. for a good round sum to Messrs. Hubbard Bros., of Philadelphia, who are employing the best humorous artists in the country to illustrate it, and propose bringing it out this spring at a popular price by subscription. Miss Holly spent all last season amid the whirl of fashion at Saratoga, and takes off its follies, flirtations, pug dogs, low neck dressing, etc., etc., in a style that is overflowing with richest humor, and must create a great sensation.

A Certainty.

Steele's Little Bile Pills are without an equal for stimulating the liver to healthy action, and creating a proper secretion of bile, thus removing from the system the germs of malaria, curing constipation, indigestion, and inducing a healthy circulation of the blood, without which no one can enjoy sound health. They are small, but effective; free from nauseating propensities and griping pains, and do not interfere in their action with the ordinary routine of daily life. Heavily sugar coated. To be had of LeGro & Lynde, for 25 cents per bottle. 1y8eow

Brace Up.

You are feeling depressed, your appetite is poor, you are bothered with Headache, you are fidgety, nervous and generally out of sorts, and want to brace up. Brace up, but not with stimulants, spring medicines, or bitters, which have for their basis very cheap, bad whisky, and which stimulate you for an hour, and then leave you in a worse condition than before. What you want is an alterative that will purify your blood, start healthy action of the Liver and Kidneys, restore your vitality, and give renewed health and strength. Such a medicine you will find in Electric Bitters, and only 50 cents a bottle at LeGro & Lynde, Palmer, and C. E. Blood's Drug Store, Ware. 3

Most Excellent.

J. J. Atkins, Chief of Police, Knoxville, Tenn., writes: "My family and I are beneficiaries of your most excellent medicine, Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption; having found it to be all that you claim for it, desire to testify to its virtue. My friends to whom I have recommended it, praise it at every opportunity." Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption is guaranteed to cure coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, croup and every affection of Throat, Chest and Lungs.

Trial bottles free at LeGro & Lynde Palmer, and C. E. Blood's Drug Store, Ware. Large size 50c. and $1. 3

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the perscription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists hroughout the world. Price 25c. a bottle. 1y21

ASTONISHING SUCCESS.

It is the duty of every person who has used Boschee's German Syrup to let its wonderful qualities be known to their friends in curing consumption, severe coughs, croup, asthma, pneumonia, and in fact all throat and lung diseases. No person can use it without immediate relief. Three doses will relieve any case, and we consider it the duty of all druggists to recommend it to the poor, dying consumptive, at least to try one bottle, as 80,000 dozen bottles were sold last year, and no one case where it failed was reported. Such a medicine as the German Syrup cannot be too widely known. Ask you druggist about it. Sample bottles to try, sold at 10 cents. Regular size, 75 cents. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in the United States and Canada. 47eow

A Woman's No.

She had a parcel, small and round,
One lovely day last summer,
I offered, as in duty bound,
To take it from her.

She thanked me with a gracious smile,
As sweet as rosy lips could make it;
It was so small, 'twas not worth while
To let me take it.

Again I offered as before,
Of that slight burden to relieve her,
She'd rather not: "Pray say no more!"
'Twould really grieve her.

I ceased to plead; she seemed content;
The thing was small and neatly corded,
And so along our way we went
To where she boarded.

But when upon the stoop she stood,
And ere our last adieus were uttered,
She eyed me in a roguish mood,
And softly muttered,

As swung the door to let her through,
And left me there all unresisting;
"I don't think very much of you
For not insisting."

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

How much a man is like his shoes!
For instance, both a soul may lose;
Both have been tanned; both are made tight
By cobblers; both get left and right;
Both need a mate to be complete,
And both are made to go on feet.
They both need healing; oft are sold,
And both in time will turn to mould,
With shoes the last is first; with men
The first shall be the last; and when
The shoes wear out they're rendered new;
When men wear out they're men dead too!
They both are trod upon, and both
Will tread on others, nothing loth.
Both have their ties, and both incline,
When polished, in the world to shine;
And both peg out. Now, would you choose
To be a man or be his shoes?

STEERING BY MOTHER'S LIGHT.

He put his hand to his mouth as if he had put a speaking trumpet there, and then shouted through them:

"Hul—lo! Hul—lo—o—o!"

There was no answer save that of the heavy swash of the sea at his feet. Neither was there anything to be seen, only a vast, thick curtain of gray mist falling everywhere over the sea.

He made another speaking trumpet of his hands and shouted again, but there was no response. Neither did the fog break before his piercing cry. Sullen and gray it hung over the sea.

"I don't see," said Pierre, "where the fishing boats are. And, of course, it don't do any good to call, but then, when one don't know what to do, why,—why he will try anything. Guess I will go into the house and see mother."

He walked up the hard sandy beach, climbed the hummocks in the rear, and then dropped down into a cozy valley that several aged willows overshadowed. Under one of these trees was Pierre's home.

"Any word from the boats?" asked a musical voice.

"That is mother," thought Pierre.

She was stooping over the fire of drift-wood that she had begun to make on the broad and blackened hearth.

"Any news from the boats?" she asked again. "It is time for the fishermen to be at home."

"Nothing," he said.

"Three boats went out, Pierre—I saw three go—your father's, your uncle Louis' and your uncle Pierre's."

Yes, three boats had gone to the fishing grounds just off a rough, rocky point—three boats rocking on the restless, surging sea.

"Four of the neighbors went with your uncle Louis."

"I know it, mother. All men in that boat."

"And Cosette went in your father's."

"Yes, and she is as good as a man in a boat."

Good as a man! Cosette, Pierre's sister, could manage a boat much better than some men.

Besides Cosette, two others of the family were in that boat—Clem and Victor, Pierre's big brothers, strong and muscular.

"I saw the boats off the point, mother, two hours ago, and I could see Cosette standing in the stearn of father's boat. Uncle Pierre's was farther out, its sail set, and the boat was skipping away."

"God keep them!" murmured the mother. "I don't like to have them late when the sea is rough. God keep them!"

"I will go out and see how things look now."

He soon came back and reported that the fog seemed to be scattering and the wind rising.

"Could you hear the waves off the Big Rock?"

"Yes, I could hear them."

The mother sighed again and again. The waves off "Big Rock" meant the surf around a lofty shore-ledge at high tide, and when a storm was approaching the agitation of the sea about this ledge was very violent and noisy. She went to the door, listened, and then slowly climbed the worn stairway leading to her little chamber under the roof.

"I think I will go up stairs," she murmured.

"It won't do any good, mother," cried Pierre, who knew what she proposed to do.

"I wish you only thought it would, Pierre."

She lighted a lamp, set it in the narrow window and then bowed her head in prayer. It was her habit on stormy nights, and Pierre had carelessly joked about it, and yet it was only talk on the surface. The terrible wrath of the sea awed him; and if his pride had not prevented, he would have declared his purpose to look at that God who holds wind and wave in his grasp.

While a mother at home was praying by the lighted lamp, souls at sea were watching it. The three boats had been bewildered in the fog. Two of them had stumbled on a little island, in one of whose coves they sought shelter for the night. The one belonging to Pierre's father had not been so fortunate. When the wind rose, and the fog scattered, Cosette's keen eyes were turned in every direction, searching for some ray from a guiding light.

"Oh, there! See!" she cried, pointing toward a dim flash of gold off on the water's edge.

"Make for that," replied her father.

The bow of the boat was pointed toward that golden spark. Slowly, but steadily, they advanced through the rough waters, and the boat was soon made fast in the little sheltered nook, not far from the home under the willows.

"Here we are!" shouted Victor at the door of the house.

"Oh, thank God!" cried the mother, coming down the stairway, her lamp in her hand. "Oh, how did you get here?"

"We steered by mother's light," said Cosette. "We saw it in the window, though we did not know what it was out there."

"Ah!" thought Pierre, "it is time I were steering by mother's light." When he lay down that night, he first knelt and asked God to guide him over life's rough sea.

The months went rapidly by. The cold, hard blasts of winter drove across the sea, and like ploughs they turned up the rough waters. Then came spring, with its softer airs, and the longer days kindled in the sky that longer light in which the sea rolled and flashed like a vast crystal. Spring, though, did not soften the cough that had attacked Pierre and with which he vainly wrestled.

"He can't live long," said the old doctor of the family; "he may go any day."

One stormy night the boy lay dying; father, mother, Cosette, Victor, Clementine, gathered in tears about his bed. Pierre was wandering in his thoughts, he fancied he was far off on the sea. The waves, he said, were running high.

"Don't you be afraid for me," he said, in low tones, looking round on those who wept at his side. "I shall—make—harbor; I'm steering by mother's light." And guided by prayer, steering by mother's light, the fisher-boy quickly reached heaven and home.—Forward.

COASTING IN AUGUST.

It was on the afternoon of the very warmest day in August that the children came running to me crying:

'There are some boys and girls from the village out on the hill, and some from the hotel on the mountain, and they all have brought their sleds.' It seemed such a puzzle to me, that I rose and went out to see what was going on.

When I reached the spacious balcony, I was almost convinced that the whole valley had been bewitched.

There were gathered at least twenty childred and half a dozen sleds. The boys were dragging the sleds up the steep slope of the hill-side that rose from the road in front of the house, while the girls followed after as well as they could.

It was not by any means an easy feat to climb this slope.

Though at a casual glance it seemed as soft and velvety as a well-kept lawn, it was to the unwary a delusion and a snare. The midsummer sun shines down upon the Adirondack mountains with as much ardor as on the city streets. Though the nights are cool, frequently even cold, there are no dews, and usually but little rain. So the short thick grass that grows abundantly upon the sides of the lesser mountains, or, more properly speaking, the foot hills, becomes somewhat parched and smooth, and as slippery as ice. The children, then, had before them quite an amount of hard walking, but those children were like mountain-goats, hardy, willing, and able to climb anything.

I watched them with interest. At last the top was reached. Then, the sleds were turned upside down, and the runners were rubbed vigorously with candles; this completed, the sleds were put in proper position again, three children seated themselves upon each, and a gentle push started them down the slope.

How swiftly they came! The slope was steep but smooth; not a rock, stump or stone on its surface; there was no danger, and the sleds stopped on the sandy road.

For two long hours this colony of children coasted—till the grass was worn almost to the roots, and the supply of tallow (which is indispensable for this midsummer coasting) was exhausted. After all the little ones were weary, we older people joined in the fun. I own to having made the descent but once—that was quite enough for me. I never before had heard of this novel amusement; but, startling as it seemed at first, the novelty soon wore away, and I became quite accustomed to the sight and sounds of coasting in midsummer.

A MARVEL IN DANCES.

A traveler gives a pretty description of the graceful egg dance which was performed for his amusement in the court of Bhopal, India. It shows us that our sword dancers and our young ladies of the ballet are not quite up to the standard of the Bhopal girl. He tells us that a slender girl, arrayed in an embroidered bodice and short skirts like those worn by the present women in this part of India, came forward very fascinatingly to him with wreathed smiles and dainty steps, and also in steps that were very sweetly modeled.

She seemed to me as if she wanted me to buy her basket of eggs along with herself, and the eggs were real eggs. She did not dance on them, however. She wore on her head a large wheel of wickerwork, and around this at equal distances were placed threads with slip knots at the ends, in each knot a glass bead to keep it from closing. The music begins. It is a quick, jerking movement, rather monotonous, and the dancer spins round in time with the measure, which grows faster and faster.

As she turns she seizes an egg from the basket, which is held on her left arm, and rapidly inserts it in one of the knots. Her circular motion causes the threads to stretch out like the spoke of a wheel. She keeps on doing this until her head is surrounded by a sort of aureole. When she has succeeded in placing all the eggs she spins round so fast that her features can hardly be seen. A false step and Humpty Dumpty would have a fall indeed. She has now the most dainty and difficult part of her dance to execute, for the dance is not done till every egg is taken from its thread and laid safely back in the empty basket. One by one, the Indian girl accomplishes this, never crushing a shell or displacing a single egg. When all are restored she stops her dizzy whirl, curtesies with grace, and offers her basket to the lookers on, who often break the eggs to prove that no juggler's trick has been used to change them.

WASHINGTON'S MODESTY.

There is a story told of Washington's first appearance as a member of the House of Burgesses. He was something more than a new member; he was the late Commander-in-Chief of the Virginia army, the foremost man, in a military way, in the province; he had just returned from the successful expedition against Fort Duquesne. So the House resolved to welcome him in a manner becoming so gallant a Virginian, and it passed a vote of thanks for the distinguished military services he had rendered the country. The Speaker, Mr. Robinson, rose when Washington came in to take his seat, and made a little speech of praise and welcome, presenting the thanks of the House. Every one applauded and waited for the tall colonel to respond. There he stood, blushing, stammering, confused. He could give his orders to his men easily enough, and he could even say what was necessary to Mrs. Martha Curtis; but to address the House of Burgesses in answer to a vote of thanks—that was another matter! Not a plain word could he get out. It was a capital answer, and the Speaker interpreted it to the House.

"Sit down, Mr. Washington," said he. "Your modesty equals your valor, and that surpasses the power of any language I possess."—From "George Washington," by Horace E. Scudder, in St. Nicholas for May.

"Heaven is not reached at a single bound," sung Dr. Holland, and the same may be said of health. But many a sick person would make rapid strides in the direction of complete health by using Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." It is a sovereign Remedy for all forms of scrofulous diseases, king's evil, tumors, white swellings, fever sores, scrofulous sore eyes, as well as for other blood and skin diseases.

SOCIETY'S LAW.

A first call from a new acquaintance should be speedily returned.

Great pains should be taken by a hostess to introduce shy people.

A mistress should inform her servants what they are to say to all comers.

One card a year left at the door, or one sent in an envelope, continues the acquaintance.

In calling on the sons and daughters every visitor should have a card for the father and mother.

Introducing should not be indiscriminately done, at home or in society, by any lady, however kind-hearted.

If one lady desires to be introduced to another, the hostess should ask if she may do so; of course, unobtrusively.

There is no need of calling after a tea or general reception, if one has attended the festivity or has left or sent a card on that day.

No gentleman should ever be introduced to a lady unless her permission has been asked and she be given an opportunity to refuse.

In her own house a hostess should always extend her hand to a person brought to her by a mutual friend and introduced for the first time.

Strangers staying in town, who wish to be called upon, should send their cards by post with address attached to those whom they would like to see.

"Not at home" is a proper formula if ladies are not receiving; nor does it involve a falsehood. It merely means that the lady is not at home to company.

Cards of condolence must be returned by a mourning card sent in an envelope at such reasonable time after the death of a relative as one can determine again to take up the business of society.

A lady who is fully aware of her own respectability, who has always lived in the best society, is never afraid to bow or call first, or to introduce the people whom she may desire to know each other.

In America it is the fashion to shake hands and most women, if desirous of becoming cordial, extend their hands even on a first introduction.—Mrs. John Sherwood.

RAPID NEWSPAPER WORK.

Can I venture on the incident here that throws an inside light on journalism? At 2 o'clock on the morning of Gen. Stephen's death, an editor of the Constitution, who with two stenographers had prepared the narrative of the night, was with the watchers in the blue room of the mansion. The Constitution had to go to press at 3.30 to the minute. It was not believed that Mr. Stevens would die before that hour. Consequently the narrative had been written in the present tense. If death should occur before the paper was put on the press there were perhaps a hundred places in the story where the past tense would have to be substituted. A force of proof readers sat with the proof before them, every contingent point marked. Thirty printers sat at their desks awaiting orders. The telephone between the mansion and the office was open, and the night editor sat with the 'phone to his ear. At 3.23 D. Steiner, rising from his knees with reverent face, said, "He is dead!" Before the whispered words had left the room, the word "dead" flew along the telephone wires and reached the listening night editor. Before the watchers in the parlor knew that the great soul had taken its flight, a dozen proof readers were plowing through slips with swift pencils, 30 printers were clipping the moorings that held the present to the past, and in just seven minutes the press was throwing off the story of the life and death of Georgia's martyr statesman.—H. W. Grady, in Atlanta, (Ga.) Constitution.

MANNERS FOR BOYS.

In the Street—Hat lifted when saying good-by or How do you do? Also when offering a lady a seat or acknowledging a favor.

Keep step with any one you walk with. Always precede a lady upstairs, but ask her if you shall precede her in going through a crowd or public place.

At the street door—Hat off the minute you enter a house or private office.

Let a lady pass first always, unless she asks you to precede her.

In the parlor—Stand until every lady in the room, also older people, are seated.

Rise if a lady enters the room after you are seated, and stand till she takes a seat.

Look people straight in the face when they are speaking to you.

Let ladies pass through a door first standing aside for them.

In the dining room—Take your seat after ladies and elders.

Never play with your knife, ring or spoon.

Do not take your napkin up in a bunch in your hand.

Eat as fast or as slow as others and finish the course when they do.

Do not ask to be excused before the others, unless the reason is imperative.

Rise when the ladies leave the room, and stand till they are out.

Special rules for the mouth: Smacking the lips and all noise should be avoided.

"And do you love me so devotedly, dear," he said, "that you will give up home and friends and all that makes your young life bright and happy to become my wife and go with me to the uttermost ends of the world if necessary?" "Yes, George," she whispered softly, "when I am your wife your thoughts shall be my thoughts, your hopes my hopes, your religion my religion; and if you should want me to go to the uttermost ends of the world with you I will go, ah, so gladly. George, I do so love to travel."—New York Sun.

"Anybody pass here within an hour?" asked a Detroiter of a Wayne county farmer standing at his gate. "Yes." "Man with a black horse?" "No; man with a white horse." "Wasn't a tin peddler, was he?" "Oh, no. He was the editor of an agricultural paper." "How do you know that?" "Because he came out on purpose to ask me whether potato planting or corn cutting came fust. He's started a new paper and wants to git things reliable."—Detroit Free Press.

The knee-breeches boom in Chicago has burst. The young men had the courage, but they didn't have the legs.—Philadelphia Call.

A Good Appetite

Is essential to good health; and at this season it is often lost, owing to the poverty or impurity of the blood, and the weakening effect of the changing season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful medicine for creating an appetite, toning the digestion, and giving strength to the whole system.

"When I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I was dizzy in the morning, had a headache, and no appetite; but now I can hardly get enough cooked to eat." EMMA SHEPARD, 1 Coral street, Worcester, Mass.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for dyspepsia, which I have had for the last nine or ten years, suffering terribly. It has now entirely cured me." Mrs. A. NORTON, Chicopee, Mass.

"I must say Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I ever used. Last spring I had no appetite, and the least work I did fatigued me ever so much. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon fel as if I could do as much in a day as I had formerly done in a week. My appetite is voracious." MRS. M. V. BAYARD, Atlantic City, N. J.

MONSON ACADEMY.

An Historic Celebration.

A Notable Gathering of Alumni.

A Full Account of an Interesting Literary Anniversary of Special Local Interest.

The new Monson academy has been fittingly dedicated this week, and the friends of the institution, both at home and abroad, have made the most of the event, for it is something which occurs but once or twice in a century. The exercises of anniversary week began Sunday evening, when Rev. Dr. Samuel Ives Curtis of the Chicago Theological Seminary delivered the baccalaureate to the graduating class at the Congregational church. The annual examinations were held Monday and Tuesday. The trustees met Monday night, and Tuesday evening a large company gathered at Memorial Hall to enjoy the graduation exercises of the 84th anniversary.

THE GATHERING IN THE CHAPEL.

How the Morning Exercises Began.

Wednesday was, of course, the great day of the week, and the early trains brought many of the old students to the village, who exchanged hearty greetings and started immediately for the academy, anxious to look over the new structure which their money had helped to erect. Their expressions of admiration at the result of the building committee's labors were universal. By 10 o'clock the spacious and beautiful chapel was filled and the faces of the former principals, Simeon Colton, Charles Hammond, James Tufts and George J. Cummings, with that of Rev. Dr. Ely, looked down approvingly from the wall behind the platform on the waiting audience. Rev. Julius H. Ward of Boston, president of the alumni, called the company to order, and asked them to sing, the piano and a choir leading

THE OPENING HYMN.

BY REV. CARLOS C. CARPENTER.

TUNE, "Peterboro."

Forsitan et hæc olim meminisse juvabit.

The years have passed like dreams away
Since here our feet were stayed;
And life has changed from day to day,
In sunshine and in shade.

But memory keeps a vision sweet
Of youth's bright morning here;
And hither oft our thoughts retreat,
As to a place most dear.

The circling hills, the paths we trod,
The stream along the vale,
Fair learning's shrine, the house of God,
Oh! these can never fail.

The faces of our student band!
We see them as of yore;
The clasp of friendship's kindly hand!
We feel it evermore.

O Youth and Hope! your joy is this—
To keep us fresh and strong.
And wed to years a nameless bliss,
Like music to a song.

Then E. F. Morris in behalf of the trustees welcomed the assembly. He said that when the family came home, being called back from a distance and different avocations, there is no need of a formal address. "You have come back to the parental roof to-day from different paths of life, to be sure, but all from its battlefield. And I welcome you, in behalf of the trustees, of this people, of these hillsides and this beautiful valley, of all the associations that so fondly cling to this spot. I welcome you all to the feast of good things."

THE OPENING REMARKS OF REV. MR. WARD AS PRESIDENT OF THE ALUMNI.

When Mr. Morris was through, Mr. Ward spoke of the occasion as of peculiar interest and of a unique character. Some of us have come here with gray heads, and all of us with kindly feelings, the same as we would bring back to the home of our childhood. Indeed next to that home what can be more precious to us than the place of our student life! What spot more freighted with delightful associations? We found on coming here something important. We found a beautiful village, a Christian atmosphere, a people devoted to the advancement of Christian education. I thank God that when I left my home I came to such a place and people. The fathers who settled here were devoted to the interest of Christian education, and we inherit their traditions. We feel grateful for this atmosphere. God grant that this building may be as useful and as helpful as was the old one. We come back in the hope that the glory of this second temple will exceed that of the first, and may God bless the institution and all its interests." When Mr. Ward had finished his remarks the invocation was offered by Rev. Dr. Hyde of Indianapolis. Then Rev. Dr. Charles L. Woodworth of Boston read that passage from Proverbs, beginning "I, wisdom, dwell with prudence, and find out knowledge by witty inventions."

THE BUILDING PRESENTED TO THE TRUSTEES.

Rev. Mr. Lyman Receives It for Them.

Next in order Mr. Cyrus W. Holmes, Jr., chairman of the building committee, came forward and presented the keys of the academy to Rev. P. W. Lyman of Belchertown, president of the board of trustees, saying as he did so, that the building has been erected for the glory of God and the pursuit of Christian education. Mr. Lyman replied for the trustees, offering their gratitude to the committee who have worked so faithfully for a year, of gratitude to the donors within and without this village, donors which have been raised up in all the cities of the country, wherever the old students of this school can be found. "Above all," said he, "we feel grateful to Almighty God to whom the institution is consecrated, for this beautiful building, commodious, well appointed and most convenient. We accept it gratefully. Little need be said in its praises, although much might be said. But it speaks for itself; you have only to look at these walls to appreciate it. I believe that it is an honest building from foundation stone to turret. We accept the gift as a sacred trust, and pray that we may be given wisdom to administer the affairs of the academy to the honor of the Master and for the help of all who come within his influence. Rev. John W. Harding of Longmeadow, followed Mr. Lyman with the prayer of dedication. Then the company sang the dedication hymn, written by Mr. Ward.

THE DEDICATION HYMN.

BY JULIUS H. WARD.

TUNE, "Dundee."

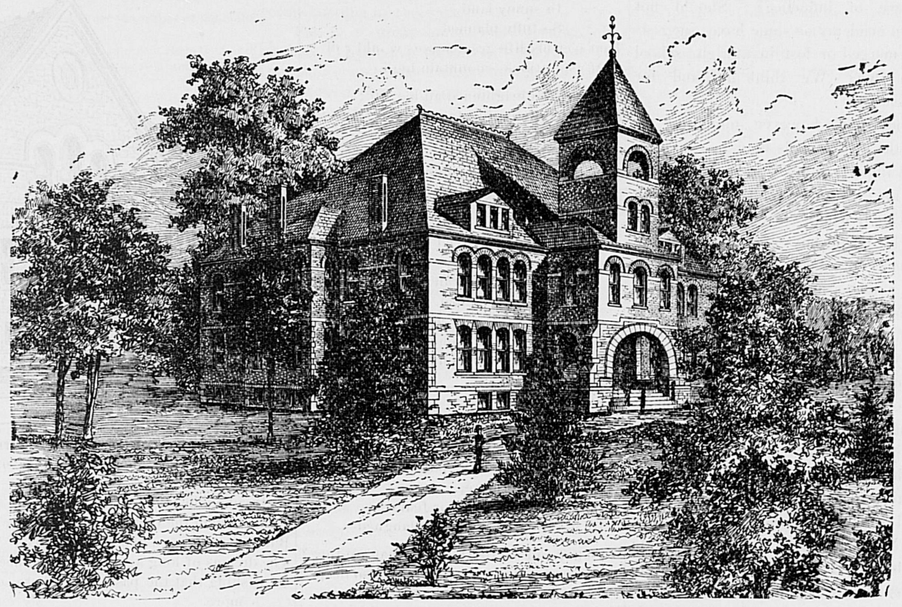
The Fathers held their work undone,
If to the House of Prayer
They added not the Christian school
Where youthful hearts could share

The strength of Reason's growing light
With Faith's subdued desire.
They planned most wisely that the Church
Should still the School inspire.

Again to Christ these walls we raise;
These silent gifts declare
Our faith and love; their lustre glows
More bright than jewels rare.

Again as erst our youth shall come
Within these hallowed walls;
Here learn from daily tests of strength
To stand where duty calls.

Accept, dear Lord, this Scholars' Home!
Our own, yet not our own;
Make living here for loyal hearts
The path to Thee alone.



THE NEW ACADEMY---A BEAUTIFUL AND CONVENIENT BUILDING.

The new Monson academy occupies the site where the old building, which was burned on the night of June 8, 1886, stood for so many years. It is the one prominent object in the village and greets the eye from nearly every point of approach. Well-graded paths lead from the street to the main entrance, which is through a spacious porch, from which the visitor steps into a wide corridor. On the right hand or south side are two recitation rooms accommodating 40 to 50 pupils each. On the left hand or north side, near the entrance, is a small recitation room which will seat 35 to 40 pupils. Passing along, the Flynt-Packard library, recessed in from the corridor, is reached. On either side of the door are beautiful memorial windows of stained glass, one of them commemorating the life of the late Rufus Flynt, the other, the gift of Samuel West of Boston, being dedicated to Art and Science. The library contains from 1100 to 1200 volumes. Over the mantel is a picture of Old Monson, showing the original academy. Passing out into the corridor and by a stairway leading to the next floor, the visitor finds himself in the philosophical room, which can also be used as a class room, in which there is a cabinet of mineralogical specimens, which is quite well supplied, considering that it is entirely new, the burning of the old academy having destroyed a large collection. The philosophical apparatus also has a place in this room. Coming into the corridor again and going up stairs, a glance is taken at the Linophilian society's room at the front of the building on the north side. It is neatly frescoed, and a very cosy assembly room. The art room comes next and is certainly a very attractive place. Here is displayed the work of the class taught by Miss M. L. Chapin. The painting has been done in considerable part in the studio beyond by a class of eight or 10. Some 50 pieces in oil presented, including fire screens, table scarfs, banners, plaque and picture frames with a few landscapes and animal figures interspersed. Several of the pieces were studies from nature. The exhibit is an exceedingly creditable one and indicative of faithful application on the part both of teacher and pupils.

The chapel is on the south side of the upper hall, and will seat 300 people. It is well lighted, and is finished and furnished very attractively. Opening from it on the north is a music room. Fireplaces of pressed brick, with wooden mantelpieces, find place in the reception room and library. All the interior wood work is finished in the natural color, and both stories have hard wood maple floors. The building is piped for gas and is heated by steam with the system of direct radiation. The builders were the Flynt Building and Construction Company of Palmer, and the architect was E. P. Ball of the same place. The cost is estimated at $30,000.

The dimensions of the building are 83 by 60 feet. The front porch is 11 by 24 feet, and the rear one eight by 24. The clear hight of the basement and of the first and second stories is 11 feet. The underpinnig is four feet high, and is pointed in broken ashlar of granite, capped with a water table of the same stone, and the superstructure is of brick, laid in red mortar. All the corners of the first story have granite groins, with buttresses on the front porch. The hip roof is slated with a terra cotta cresting. The tower projects two stories above the main building, and also has a hip roof slated and capped with copper finial. In the basement is the laboratory, 20 by 28 feet, fitted with modern apparatus. On the first floor is the main hall, 22 by 57 feet, on both sides of which are school rooms. Those on the south side are 28 feet square, and will seat 56 pupils, while the north rooms are 20 by 28 feet, and will seat 42 pupils. The available space in the attic has been fitted up for a gymnasium.

A PLEA FOR THE CHRISTIAN ACADEMY.

An Address by Rev. Dr. Samuel Ives Curtiss of Chicago.

After the singing the president said that the academy has sent out its voice to the end of the earth, both in state and church, and she has been particularly fortunate in her students who have had large influence in the direction of Christian education. And in selecting one such graduate from many it seemed fitting to invite to our platform at this time Rev. Dr. Samuel Ives Curtis of Chicago. Dr. Curtis said he was pleased to be the one selected to speak, although he felt that the task should have fallen to another. He then spoke as follows: "Society is in need of salvation. Socialism, nihilism, anarchism, are symptoms of a deep-seated evil in the body politic. It does not concern us to determine how the disease has arisen. It exists and must be cured. Our relief is not in the optimism of hope, or in the pessimism of despair. Hope is indeed an important element in the recovery of health, but it is sometimes like the will with the wisp luring the poor consumptive on to his grave.

"Various remedies have been proposed for the cure of the body politic which may all be summed up in a popular conception of modern civilization. This civilization is characterized by culture, wealth and power. It aims at producing a high degree of intelligence and virtue. Its instruments are schools and universities, the press, libraries, art galleries, concerts, the drama and opera. It is not distinctively Christian in its aims and methods. So far as it is under Jewish influence, which has become a great power in the modern social fabric in some countries, it is anti-Christian, and in Germany alone 60 per cent of the newspapers are managed by Jews.

"But this remedy is vain. Modern civilization cannot save society. It is a favorite doctrine, however, that it can and will, that society by a steady development is ascending from savagery to the Olympian heights where it will hold communion with the goddesses of wisdom and beauty. But society has tried to climb these heighths before. In a land which clothed a Venus and a Minerva in those beautiful robes of fable, whose skies might well woo men to heavenly thoughts, whose creations of mind and fancy have not been excelled, ancient civilization, which in its essential features was not different from modern, did its utmost. But this remedy was no more effective for old Grecian society than the hectic flush on beauty's pallid cheek. Disease was still at work and the body politic was full of corruption. The same remedy in a different form was tried in the land of the Cæsars. Statesmanship and military prowess went hand in hand. Vast possessions were won. Cities were beautified. Great roads were built from Rome to the remotest provinces. Meanwhile society lay sick of a mortal disease. Gladiatorial shows and pageants were applied like cups of water to the parched lips of the sufferer. They allayed the thirst for the time, but could not cure the fever. At length death came.

"Many are now seeking a similar remedy for our body politic in modern civilization. Socialism holds that society will be saved when every man is educated and can sit under his own vine and fig tree. Society is to be made happy when music, art and the refinements of life are the possession of all. For the great mass of the community, however, modern civilization is not medicine, it is diagnosis. It places an idea before a man which only makes him feel how far he comes short of it. It creates in him a hunger. In imagination he sees a bounteous feast spread before him which suddenly disappears in the air; it transports him into a mountain top of thought and aspiration, and shows him kingdoms which he can never possess; it decks him in fair clothing which displays his person to the best advantage and then suddenly drops him among the toilers in the ditch, or in the shop. The tendency of modern civilization is to increase knowledge and to elevate ideals. Its tendency is equally strong to monopolies in land, in manufactureis, and in trade. It broadens and deepens the chasm between the very poor and the very rich.

"Do you question the truth of these general statements? Listen! and you will hear the "bitter cry of outcast London" rising from the squalid tenements, your cheek will blanch with fear as you catch the mutterings and curses of communists in Paris; or the plotting of socialists in Berlin, and as you mark the bullet aimed at the Emperor's heart; your knees will tremble as the hoarse murmur of Chicago anarchists is borne in on your ear, followed by the explosion of the deadly bomb and the fall of the city's protectors. I need not mention other examples. Society is suffering from a disease which no human physician can cure,—the bloom of modern civilization cannot afford a sufficient remedy.

"Biblical Christianity can and does save society. I say Biblical Christianity, because Christianity is sometimes spoken of as though it were essentially the same as modern civilization, with the narrow ideas of the Bible left out, and the progressive spirit of the age put in. Such a Christianity reminds me of the marriage, described in Genesis, of the sons of God with the daughters of men. Giants were the fruit of that union, but the earth became corrupt and was full of violence.

"Biblical Christianity is now essentially of the same sort that it was in the times of the apostles. It turns the world upside down, but is never conformed to the world. It claims to be the supreme autocrat in all human affairs. But it does not deal with slaves, nor with those who surrendered conscience or individuality. It gives to each man the sublime privilege of choice. It soars above the highest ideals of the human mind in its representations of the true, the beautiful and the good; and in the person of its founder dares to say to its humblest disciple: 'All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth; better things than you see shall be yours, human thought is vain and the treasures of speech are bankrupt when describing what you shall be. You are a child of a King and shall one day reign with me.' Such ideals do not make men restless and plotters against society. It is true that godliness and contentment go together, just as much as atheism and anarchism. Socialism, nihilism and anarchism would be impossible if society were pervaded with Biblical Christianity.

"Now mark the difference. Modern civilization, through its highest culture, without the leaven of the Gospel presents a series of ideas, which to the majority of mankind must be perfectly unattainable. Hence, modern civilization, so far as it is not controlled by Christianity, plays into the hands of the enemies of society. Think how it must seem to a man who does not believe in a hereafter, and yet who is gifted with high aspiration, to find himself a mere clod, with no future that offers any prospect of happiness. Such a man is ready for suicide or to adopt the theories of those who would like to reduce society to a dead level.

"Biblical Christianity, on the other hand, as we have said, presents the highest ideals and the brighest prospects; and teaches that in the future life of every true believer the realization of these shall be beyond description. The more men live in the inspiration of these ideals, the more they are ennobled and contented with the allotments of their life. If their life seems like a pilgrimage they feel like princes in disguise. They have heard and believed the voice which says: "All things are yours," calm and undisturbed they could behold the wreck of worlds, knowing that they have a better inheritance.

"Are Biblical Christianity and true culture then antagonistic? By no means. Christianity can show diviner creations in science and the arts than heathen civilization ever produced. Raphael's Sistine Madonna is infinitely superior to Venus de Medici as a representation of womanly beauty; or better perhaps of womanhood glorified. And in our modern times Handel's "Messiah" strikes a far higher theme and yields a nobler music than Mozart's "Don Juan" or any of the creations which are founded on intrigue or sensuous love.

"Indeed Christianity has been the guardian of all liberal arts. If at times it has seemed to be timorous, as mothers sometimes are with reference to the daring exploits of beloved sons, this has not arisen from the genius of Christianity itself, but rather from the human imperfection of its supporters. Its missionaries have been the explorers of unknown continents, have aided in important scientific researches, have led the way for commerce. To the interest which centers in its divine records we owe the wonderful discoveries which have been made in Assyria and Egypt. In short, in almost every field of human inquiry Christianity has shone resplendent.

"But its chief glory is not in these things. It is rather in the transforming power which it exerts on society, for I am not speaking of a spiritual salvation but rather of Christianity as a factor in daily life. The miracle of the poor lunatic who found a dwelling place in the tombs and was ever moving restlessly about and doing himself injury, but who at the command of Christ was healed so that he was found sitting, clothed, and in his right mind, is in a sense repeated each day. Men are born again as clearly as Saul was on his way to Damascus, and while they do not receive new bodies, the gambler, the drunkard and the fallen become new creatures in Christ, and instead of sinking into graves of infamy they become respectable members of society. But the body politic is made up of individuals, and the power that can regenerate individuals can regenerate the state. The new birth of society through the Divine Spirit is not sufficient. A babe is a helpless thing. It is true, indeed, that wonderful potencies are wrapped up in these little bundles of life. A great philosopher, or scientist, or orator, may be in germ a wan, weak, motherless little babe, whose best fortune, many might think, would be to die with its mother. But many such apparently luckless babes have become powers in the world. Yet their power even when their natural endowments are great, has come through training. This fact is as true with reference to individuals and societies who have been born again, as it is concerning those who have come into the world through a natural birth.

A regenerate man recieves a new nature, so that the libertine, the drunkard and the gambler becomes new creatures through the power of the Divine Spirit. But the Spirit of God does not feed the minds of men any more than he does their bodies. Mental training, like bodily training, comes through the use of human means. Our forefathers were right, then, in their marriage of the church and school. They believed that the system of truth they held, emanating from God's Word, was worthy of the noblest efforts of the mind, so that with them education and Biblical Christianity were almost synonymous.

"Again, if Christianity gets a hearing those who proclam it must be respected for their character and attainments. It is indeed a great mistake to rely upon literary culture as the main instrumentality in reaching men, but literary culture is an important element in those factors which go to make up a man who is to mold others. Now since society has reached a higher educational level than ever before, and since we believe that Biblical Christianity is the only thing that can save society, it follows: That a higher Christian education is the greater need of the times.

The tendency of our age in this country is to secularize education, to drop out from it all Christian elements; the great effort seems to be in many communities to turn man into a successful machine for making money. The practical elimination of Christianity from public schools of every grade has come about through the effort of the state to take the whole system of education in charge from the primary school to the university. Such control of the whole system of education is found in the great commonwealth of the interior as Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, etc.

"This system of state education seems to a great extent to have been modeled on that of Germany, but it breaks down at the most essential point in education,—namely, religious instruction. In Germany there is the union of church and state. Hence in the primary schools and gymnasia, religion, as it is called, occupies a prominent place. Boys are taught the truths of the Bible and the history of the early church. But in our country there is such a complete divorce between the church and the state, that the Bible has been thrust out of the public schools in our cities. While there are many noble Christian teachers in connection with our schools and universities whose lives are a power for good, and while the Young Men's Christian associations have secured a strong foothold in the state universities, yet these universities fail of being nurseries of Christianity. They are not Christian in their constitution and intent, and have Christian men for professors simply because they are the best adapted to take the chairs of instruction,—because Christian colleges have trained them and because such colleges in the interior, through their reflex influence, are continually toning up the religious life of the state universities.

"When Christian colleges in New England still receive a large supply from academies, it is a question whether they are not becoming secularized through the secularization of preparatory schools under the influence of the state. It is certainly true that while high schools are increasing, Christian academies are now few in number. Where are the 218 academies which were formed in New England and New York 50 years ago? The high school has taken their places. How imperfectly such schools are adapted to perform the work of the classical academy was well pointed out by the late Dr. Charles Hammond, who was so well known to many of us. That they are liable to fail, through the omission of certain studies, to prepare men for the classical course in college, appears from the fact that the Chicago high school has dropped Greek from its curriculum.

"The tendency of the age is to cities. Now, one-fourth of our population reside in them. Dr. Philbrick is undoubtedly correct in his view that this tendency is likely to continue indefinitely. But the cities are pre-eminently the seats of the high schools. Since these institutions do not exert a positive influence—not to speak of a neglect in many of them to teach ethics—they cannot be relied on to supply the trained forces that are demanded to save cities. It is useless to say that men and women who have merely received a secular education with positive moral and religious teaching left out, are oftentimes wanting in morality. An official in one of our largest cities, of great integrity and carefulness of statement, testified that during his term of office it was found that not a few abandoned women had been scholars in the high school. They had learned to desire the luxuries of life, but had not learned the art of an honorable livelihood. A chaplain in one of your penal institutions for five years said that educated men among the prisoners were as thick as grasshoppers. So long as education is secularized, through state control, our cities cannot raise up men in its own schools in any sufficient numbers who are to be the saviors of society. Nor can such men come from country schools in the large towns where the moral and religious education of the youth has been almost entirely neglected. It is evident then, that so far as we are dependent on the higher education for the safety of cities we must rely more and more on Christian academies, such as Monson academy has been and such as we may hope it ever will be.

"Beloved friends: Monson academy was never more needed than now. It still draws largely to its halls boys and girls from the country with noble aspirations and true consecration. They may perhaps have a great fight of affliction in getting an education, but these same boys and girls are the ones upon whom our cities must rely as leaders in the sacramental host. The importance of such Christian institutions in the country can hardly be exaggerated. The city does not send out men as ministers and missionaries. Its young men almost without exception seek the rewards of business and political preferment, while vast masses of foreign and native populations are perishing for lack of the bread of life, and through poverty and crime are a perpetual menace to society. The regenerating forces then must come from the country, from Christian schools founded by private munificence, which are not merely ambitious for learning, but for a learning that is permeated by the spirit of Christ.

"Beloved friends of Monson academy: You have done well in maintaining this school and in seeking to place it on broader foundations. May its past noble record be but the harbinger of its future for all time to come."

THE SEMI-CENTENNIAL HYMN.

By MRS. PHOEBE H. BROWN.

(The Hymn of which the following is a part, was sung at the semi-centennial celebration of Monson Academy, July 19, 1854.)

TUNE, "St. Martin's."

With grateful joy once more we greet
This consecrated place,
The story of the past repeat,
And kindred souls embrace.

The dear mementos of the past,
That marked the scenes around,
Have faded and are fading fast
From off this cherished ground.

Where are those venerable men
Whose presence graced that hall?
For duty was the watchword then,
And they obeyed its call.

Tread lightly o'er the sacred Past,
On this bright festal day!
Remembrances are gathering fast
On what has passed away.

Farewell, ye scenes of other years,—
The joys and griefs of yore!
We meet with smiles—we part in tears,—
In Heaven we part no more.

THE HISTORICAL ADDRESS.

What Mr. Tufts Said About the Academy.

After singing the above hymn Mr. Ward introduced Mr. Tufts as a leader of men and a maker of history, as far as this academy is concerned. The ex-principal began with a graceful welcome to the venerable Dr. Barnard of Hartford in particular, and the whole assembly in general. The tribute which he paid to the perseverence of Mr. Flynt in raising the money for the new building was as well appreciated by the audience as it was deserved. He then spoke in this way:

"The history of the academy has been so carefully written by Dr. Hammond, till 1863, and by Rev. Isaac Clark, till the reunion four years ago, 1883, that I shall only briefly allude to the main points of this history, giving some reasons for the continued support of this institution by its friends and the public. Monson academy was incorporated in 1804, and the building dedicated Oct. 26th, 1806, when a sermon was preached by Rev. Richard S. Storrs of Longmeadow, one of the trustees of the new academy. There have been in these 81 years 20 principals and about 135 assistant teachers, male and female, who have taught not less than 7000 pupils in these years, and about 500 of these have been prepared for college. It is a long procession, 7000 pupils and 135 teachers to pass in review before us. And yet we may not linger on the many scenes that crowd the memory in such an hour; the greetings and the farewells, morning and evening prayers and the daily recitations in all these years; Dr. Colton for 10 years, and Dr. Hammond for 25 years presiding with dignity and inspir-

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JULY 8, 1887.

EX-GOV. ANSON P. MORRILL of Maine died at Augusta, Monday, at the age of 84 years.

AN equestrian statue of Gen. Burnside was unveiled at Providence Monday, with an imposing military display.

SENATOR DON CAMERON of Pennsylvania celebrated the Fourth by entertaining some 1500 poor children at his place near Washington, D. C. Men of wealth might add immensely to the amount of happiness in the world by spending more of their money in some such way as this.

LUKE P. POLAND, one of Vermont's best known and most respected sons, died at his home in Waterville last Saturday, in his 72d year. Judge Poland had been chief justice of the supreme court of Vermont, United States senator, and congressman, and was a man of conspicuous ability and integrity.

YALE gained a fine victory over Harvard in the university boat race at New London last Sunday, coming out nearly five lengths ahead, in 22m. 56s., the conditions not being favorable for fast time. Each crew has now won six races, and the struggle for supremacy next year promises to be somewhat intense.

NEW YORK'S Saturday half-holiday is becoming quite firmly established, and it is estimated that already 100,000 people in the metropolis enjoy its benefits. It is a good institution, and its observance is spreading more or less to other cities. It ought to be quite generally observed, especially during the summer months.

IF "estimates" are approximately realized by the results, the new Poughkeepsie bridge over the Hudson may be of considerable benefit to western Massachusetts, as it is figured that the saving on coal brought over the bridge route will be something like 78 cents a ton for Springfield, $1.15 for Palmer and 88 cents for Worcester, over existing routes. Such a reduction would be something like. Let the bridge be built as soon as possible.

GETTYSBURG, Pa., was the scene of a pleasant reunion last Saturday, when the remnants of Pickett's division, which fought so desperately there, visited the memorable field and was warmly welcomed by the Philadelphia brigade. There was a union camp-fire of the blue and gray, speeches were made, letters read from President Cleveland and Senator Sherman, and the battlefield was visited and the course of the conflict traced.

THE Democrats are going to make a stupendous effort to carry Massachusetts in the fall campaign, as they fully realize that it would be a big lift to them in the national election next year. There is no particular danger of their electing a Democratic governor if the Republicans are awake to their opportunities and responsibilities. But there must be no meaningless platform planks, and something besides genial suavity is requisite at the head of the ticket.

RATHER a pleasant way of traveling is that adopted by W. K. Vanderbilt, who started last Saturday on a three years' cruise around the world in his large steam yacht Alva. He is accompanied by his wife, three children and two guests. The officers and crew number 62 men, and it is estimated that the trip will cost Mr. Vanderbilt about $125,000 a year. Now that he has set the example we shall expect to see quite a number of country editors following his footsteps when going on a vacation trip.

ANOTHER Fourth has come and gone, and happily there is no great tragedy or conflagration to record. There were enough fires to keep the firemen active, and the catalogue of minor accidents is a long one. But what matters that? It is the small boy's day, when he is privileged to make himself as noisily obnoxious as possible, without regard to the peace, comfort or safety of his elders, well or sick. We suspect the steady-going fathers would open their eyes in amazement if they were to see and hear the racket which is considered essential to a real good observance of the day [and night,] and it is barely possible that some more rational, more patriotism-inspiring manner of celebrating may come into vogue by and by. But it won't as long as the boys are allowed to be their own judges as to the amount of Bedlam which shall be let loose.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has written a letter to the mayor of St. Louis recalling his acceptance of the invitations of the city and Grand Army to attend the national encampment in that city. He does this because of the harsh criticism of Grand Army men upon his official acts, and to avoid the unpleasantness which would result from the fulfilment of their threats to insult him if present. The letter is dignified, manly and strong, and must cause a feeling of intense shame in every true American heart that any organization, and the Grand Army of all others, should by its unpatriotic utterances, give occasion for its being written. The president says:—

> I refuse to believe that this organization, founded upon patriotic ideas, composed very largely of men entitled to lasting honor and consideration, and whose crowning glory it should be that they are American citizens as well as veteran soldiers, deems it a part of its mission to compass any object or purpose by attempting to intimidate the executive or coerce those charged with making and executing the laws. And yet the expressions to which I have referred indicate such a prevalence of unfriendly feeling and such a menace to an occasion which should be harmonious, peaceful and cordial, that they cannot be ignored. I beg you to understand that I am not conscious of any act of mine which should make me fear to meet the Grand Army of the Republic, or any other assemblage of my fellow citizens. The account of my official stewardship is always ready for presentation to my countrymen. I should not be frank if I failed to confess, while disclaiming all resentment, that I had been hurt by the unworthy and wanton attacks upon me growing out of this matter and the reckless manner in which my actions and motives have been misrepresented, both publicly and privately, for which, however, the Grand Army of the Republic, as a body, is by no means responsible.

Halsey Gaines, a boy of 15, had his arm and one side of his head badly lacerated by one of Barnum's leopards last Saturday, in trying to peep into the cage as it was being unloaded from the cars.

A fight in the Italian camp at Amherst Sunday resulted in the killing of one of the gang and the wounding of his brother. The murderer made his escape.

A Fourth of July without rain—who ever heard of such a thing!

The rain Tuesday night was a grateful relief from the hot weather.

There will be no preaching services at the Baptist church next Sunday.

Principal Knox of the high school is spending his vacation in New Hampshire.

Joseph Provost has bought a half interest in the barber shop owned by Oliver Lasalle.

The moon was very considerate—it did not get full until the day after the Fourth.

Some of the classes of the Congregational Sunday school picnicked at Forest Lake Tuesday.

The season for strawberries is nearly at an end, and cherries and raspberries are now in the market.

Rev. H. W. Pope read a paper before the Christian Endeavor convention at Saratoga on Wednesday.

The Golden Rule Alliance will meet at the residence of E. J. Wood, on Central street, next Tuesday evening.

The Womans' Christian Temperance Union will hold a meeting in the parlors of the Congregational church next Thursday afternoon at three o'clock.

The choir of the Congregational church went in a body to Ludlow this afternoon, by invitation of the leader, W. F. Miller, to spend the afternoon and evening as his guests.

Fred W., the 14-years-old son of D. E. Robinson, had one side of his face blown full of powder Monday while firing a small cannon, but fortunately was not seriously injured.

Charles Squier is having an excellent trade at his ice cream rooms in the Nassowanno House block. He makes a first-class article, which the people are not slow in appreciating.

The Flynt Building and Construction Co. has the contract to erect a dormitory for the Stone Trust Co. at New Haven, Ct. The structure is to be built of brown stone, and will cost about $30,000.

The fence between the railroad and Main street, which has been left down since the night of the fire, is repaired once more, and travelers will now be obliged to climb the fence or go around, as before.

Wren's tent show gave a performance of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" on the saw mill lot on Thorndike street Wednesday evening, with a minstrel show afterward. The audience was not very good, and the show ditto.

The following scholars in the wire mill school were neither absent nor tardy during the term just closed: Ralph Baker, Maud Baker, Charles Barron, Mabel Crosby, Grace Wells, Purlin Shearer, Fred Crosby, Herbert Baker.

A decision was reached in the superior court Tuesday in the case of L. G. and W. E. Reed against the town of Palmer, for damages sustained by a defective highway. Loren G. Reed was given $12, and the boy, Warren E. Reed, $151.

The ladies' social union of St. Pauls' church held a pleasant lawn party with Mrs. C. K. Gamwell, on the grounds of Mrs. Elisha Converse, on Thorndike street, last evening, the lawn being handsomely decorated with Chinese lanterns.

Quaboag Council, Royal Arcanum, received three new members Tuesday evening. An invitation was also received from Equity council of Springfield to help celebrate the 10th anniversary of their organization on the 14th, at Riverside Grove, and it was accepted.

The Glorious Fouth proved too much for Wells Johnson of Westfield and John Carter of Monson, and they paid fines of $7.01 and $8.38 for drunkenness, on the fifth. Flora Kelsey also paid a fine of $12.39 for larceny of a gold ring. Yesterday Michael Grady was up for drunkenness, and had his case continued to the 14th.

One of the bloodhounds in the street parade Wednesday manifested a desire to make mincemeat of Mrs. William Merriam's pet cat while passing through Pleasant street, and dragged his leader over flower beds and walks in endeavoring to get at pussie, whose owner came to its rescue with a broom and beat the dog off.

The auxiliary workers of the Baptist church met Tuesday evening and elected these officers for the following six months: President, Rev. A. W. Weeks; vice-presidents, F. L. Brooks and Mary Smith; recording secretary, N. W. Chandler; corresponding secretary, Lillian Burr; collector, P. M. Shearer; treasurer, G. H. Justin.

The Palmer base ball team will play a game with the Monsons to-morrow afternoon on the park, the home players and positions being as follows: M. Rooney, pitcher; Sugrue, catcher; McManamy, first base; Knight, second base; Kinare, third base; Woodard, short stop; Rooney, left field; Betts, center field; Higgins, right field.

At the recent meeting of the trustees of the state primary and reform schools, Charles L. Gardner of Palmer, S. R. Heywood of Worcester, James J. O'Connor of Holyoke, Mrs. Glendower Evans and Miss E. C. Putnam of Boston were chosen a special committee of the state primary school at Monson. Amos Andrews was chosen superintendent, and Dr. Sarah M. Wilbur resident physician.

Success does not always attend the efforts of the liquor prosecuting committee. Last Friday evening one of them found a couple of cases of lager on the freight house steps after closing hours, and supposing he had a right to seize the stuff wherever found, carried it off. He soon discovered that it belonged to a private family, and that he had no right to it, so returned it. The owner, who in the meantime had called with a team and found his beer gone, did not appear again, and it is reported that the committeemen watched the stuff all night, for fear it would be stolen. Saturday forenoon a liquor dealer was seen on the street with a barrel marked "Rye Gin" in his wagon. He was promptly overhauled and a hole bored in one end of the barrel—there was a faucet in the other end—when the barrel proved to be empty. The owner was only going for a barrel of water preparatory to putting Paris green on his potato patch.

PROBATE COURT MATTERS.

The following business for this section was transacted by the probate court at Springfield Wednesday: Administrations were granted on the estates of—Maria Camlin late of Palmer, Francis Camlin administrator; Laura Squier, late of Monson, Persis E. Squier administrator with the will anexed. Wills approved of—Warren Collins, late of Wilbraham, Ira G. Potter executor; Lucinda K. Packard, late of Monson, Solomon F. Cushman executor; Francis Day late of Monson, Jacob T. Rogers executor; Lucretta D. Howlett, late of Hampden, Epaphro A. Day executor. Francis B. Pease was appointed guardian of Delanon F., Elmer G., Susie E. and Lizzie V. Pease, of Monson, minors. An inventory was filed on the estate of John Trask, late of Wilbraham, personal $4397, and an account also rendered in the estate. Affidavit of sale of real estate was issued in the estate of George M. Lyman and others of Wilbraham, minors. A construction of the will of Charles Noble, late of Wilbraham, as touching certain provisions, was made by the judge, and John and Harriet A. McDonald, of Holyoke, were given permission to adopt Harriet Flanaghan, of Ludlow, changing her name to McDonald.

HIGH SCHOOL ENTERTAINMENT.

A large audience was present at the Congregational church last Friday afternoon to listen to the prize speaking contest and the singing of the Temple Quartette of Boston. There were twelve contestants, and the judges, Rev. F. W. Betts, Rev. H. W. Pope, W. C. Greene, Mrs. F. H. Proctor and R. C. Newell—had hard work to determine which were most entitled to the prizes, so excellently was each piece rendered. The awards were finally made as follows: First prize to young men, Knight's History of England, in eight volumes, Howard Willis, "The Obligations of America to England;" second, gold pen and pencil, Leon Bartlett, "Two Hundred Years." First prize to young ladies, photograph album, Mina Ball, "A Basket of Flowers;" second, gold pen with pearl holder, Marion Paine, "The Ride of Jenny MacNeil." The Temple Quartette interspersed several fine pieces in the programme. In the evening the house was well filled by an audience which, in spite of the warm weather, thoroughly appreciated the work of Leland T. Powers in his rendition of the play of "David Garrick," in which he carried out all the parts, giving no two the same voice or expression. In fact, if one could not see the stage it would seem the same as if each character was taken by a different person, instead of all by one. Powers certainly has a wonderful control of his voice and facial expression, and the entertainment, which was materially added to by the singing of the Temple Quartette, was the most enjoyable one of the season.

THE GLORIOUS FOURTH.

Timid and nervous people were glad when daylight came Monday morning. Hardly had the town clock ceased striking midnight when the three church and the school house bells were rung with a will for at least half an hour. In the meantime a fife and drum corps, with an accompaniment of fish horns, paraded the streets, firing off cannon crackers and waking up those who were not already aroused.

About six o'clock the procession of antiques and horribles started from the Point of Rocks, and paraded through the principal streets of the village. Although not as large as the last one, it made a fine showing, the hits all being good ones. The raids on the two hotels were well represented, while the Palmer hose company, the electric fire alarm and the Palmer cornet band were good. The governor and staff were escorted by a guard armed with a musket and shovel, while Indians, Chinamen and reporters were numerous. The state primary school sent down a good design, a wagon carrying a platform, in the center of which, on a raised surface, sat an old bagpiper, while on the corners were statues.

The stores were all open in the forenoon, but except such as sold fireworks and other holiday materials, were closed in the afternoon. A ball game between the Palmer and Three Rivers clubs was played on the park in the forenoon, the Palmers proving too much for their adversaries. A large number of people spent the day at Forest Lake, others went to Westfield and some to Holyoke, while there were numerous private parties and picnics.

At Forest Lake the athletic sports previously advertised resulted as follows: One hundred yards running race—first, P. J. Murphy of North Wilbraham; second, J. J. Murphy of North Wilbraham; third, James Hartley of New Hartford; cash prize, $4, time 10½ seconds. Shot putting contest—first, P. J. Murphy; second J. J. Murphy; third, P. M. Murphy; prize, $3. Three legged race—first, P. J. Murphy and mate; second, J. D. Dennany and mate of Chicopee Falls; prize, $2. Catch-as-catch-can wrestling match—P. J. Murphy; prize $25 gold medal. Single scull boat race—first, P. M. Murphy; second, J. Dunleary of New Britain, Ct.; prize, $25.

The day at the state primary school was an interesting one for the children. All were aroused at 5 o'clock in the morning by the firing of cannon, the ringing of bells and blowing of horns. A delegation joined in the parade in this village in morning and all came down to see it. Upon their return torpedoes and fire-crackers were distributed. At 10 o'clock all went to the ice pond to see the swimming and tub races. These furnished amusement till dinner time, when a good Fourth of July dinner was served. The afternoon brought the foot races and lots of fun. The fire works were let off between 8 and 9 o'clock, closing with the sending up of the balloon "Jumbo."

In spite of the moonlight evening there were numerous private displays of fireworks about the village, while a large display was made from the hill across the river, the only fault being the low elevation given the rockets. Many of the sticks struck about the streets and yards in the village, and several narrow escapes were had. No fires and no serious accidents were reported, other than the usual amount of burned fingers, etc., without which the small boy would be unhappy.

WALES.

The Fourth passed off quietly. No drunks reported.

E. Shaw bought the Eli Gardner farm at auction last Saturday.

A French boy named Tatro smashed a finger in the card gear in the Dell mill Wednesday.

Harry Needham took photos of the new water fountain Wednesday. They can be had in a few days.

The Wales Savings Bank declared a 2¼ semi-annual dividend. The committee of investment is: Warren Shaw, G. S. Rogers, Wm. L. Webber and H. A. McFarland.

O. C. Switzer, the mail carrier, has added to his teams a nice covered wagon upholstered in latest style and large enough to carry ten persons. He is now ready to accommodate wedding parties, picnics, or any other parties that desire conveyance to any desired resort.

LUDLOW.

The school question is settled at last. At the special town meeting held Saturday the committee of conference reported this settlement: The company were to give the town the use of the school building at a nominal rental of $100 a year, and pay one-quarter of the teachers' salaries; and that Secretary Dickinson was to nominate the teachers, and the course of study, both to be subject to the town's approval. The report of the committee was accepted and the town then voted unanimously to accept the conditions proposed.

The Fourth was celebrated in an unusually lively manner this year. A procession was made up at five o'clock and marched from the Indian Orchard depot to the Ludlow square, where a witty address was made and a poem read which contained some excellent hits on the recent school controversy. Charles F. Tarbox was chief marshal and the merchants and trades were represented in the line, of which, however, the antiques and horribles were the chief feature. About $50 in prizes was divided among those who took part in the parade for the best hits. A dance and picnic in the afternoon and an exhibition of fire-works in the evening closed the day's sports.

WARREN.

Rev. Mr. Clark and wife have gone to Barnstable for two weeks.

Everybody and their wives are going, or have gone, to the seashore.

The Fourth passed off very quietly. The Methodists had a very enjoyable picnic in Burbank's grove, while the Catholics had one in Flannery's grove, finishing with a dance in the evening.

The public library question is now being agitated. It is decided to let each person in town help build it, so subscription papers are to be handed around so that no one will be overlooked, and the children may feel that they have added their mite.

The alumni reunion at the hotel Wednesday evening was a decided success, about fifty being present. A poem was read, also letters from former teachers and toasts from the different classes. The supper was all that could be desired. Music and congratulations also made the hours pass quickly until the midnight hour, when an adjournment was made for a year, after electing officers.

WEST BRIMFIELD.

Willis Shaw of Springfield spent the Fourth with his folks at this place.

Quite a crowd from this place attended Barnum's circus at Springfield Saturday.

Master Herbert King is visiting his cousins, Master and Miss Knowlton of Bondsville.

Wanted—An applicant for a lucrative position at this place as postmaster. No experience necessary.

Section Foreman Eastman, with a large force of help, is raising the tracks between Palmer and North Wilbraham.

W. E. Holland is at Bondsville for a few days taking the place of the baggage master at the Boston & Albany station, who is on the sick list.

The Fourth was ushered in with lots of patriotism and noise. A band, composed of choice musicians with tin pans, etc., formed at the corners at 12.05 a. m., and with fire crackers, war whoops and songs started for Palmer to inspect the antiques and horribles of that place, discoursing sweet music on the way. A small party visited Forest Lake in the afternoon. The day's festivities closed with an exhibition of fireworks in the evening at J. P. Eastman's.

WEST WARREN.

Albert R. Cutler has gone to Boston.

Miss Ada Crouch is visiting friends in Worcester.

Byron Harmon of Portland, Maine, is visiting in town.

Ed. Cross of Worcester made a flying visit to his friends Monday.

Lottie Cross of Monson has been visiting her aunt, Mrs. C. L. Carter.

John Hedge, formerly station agent at Old Furnace, has been appointed telegraph operator at the depot.

Edward McAdam of Milltown, New Brunswick, has taken a position with the Warren cotton mills as bookkeeper in the cloth room.

Rev. Hugh Montgomery of Worcester preached in the M. E. church Sunday morning and lectured in the Congregational chapel Sunday evening.

The glorious Fourth was celebrated rather quietly. The Sunday schools of both churches held a union picnic in Crossman's grove, many attended the picnic at Warren, some the horse trot at Brookfield, and others went to Forest Lake. In the evening a good display of fireworks was made on the hill back of the depot, and some water pieces were fired off on No. 1 pond.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

H. W. Cutler has been admitted to the firm of Cutler & Co.

The Fourth was a very quiet day here, and every body seemed to enjoy that part of it as well as any.

The paper and grain mills both shut down July 2, and did not start up till Thursday morning. The paper mill company has put down a lot of new floors.

The Sunday evening service of Grace church will be omitted through the months of July and August, and the Endeavor society have extended an invitation to the congregation to attend their meetings for these two months.

The Christian Endeavor society netted about $17 from the lawn party held to raise funds to pay expenses of delegates to Saratoga. It was voted to pay the delegates $8.50 each, and E. W. Wall, Mrs. Cooley and Mr. Parker left on the Tuesday morning train.

The house in the east part of the town owned by Benjamin Butler and occupied by Henry C. Butler was entirely destroyed by fire early Monday morning. The fire caught on the roof; cause unknown, but very likely a fire cracker. Mr. Butler was away from home and the trackmen on the railroad were the first to discover the fire. Part of the furniture was saved.

WILBRAHAM.

C. Beebe of Colorado is home.

Charles Merrick is at the seaside this week.

Dr. G. M. Steele preached in the First church at Longmeadow last Sabbath.

A party of young people from Springfield took supper and had a dance at the Allis house Saturday evening.

The family of President Warren of Boston university are at Mr. Merrick's, and H. O. Beck and family are at Mrs. Henry Brewer's for the summer.

A lively runaway occurred Tuesday afternoon, when a horse belonging to Calvin Robbins ran down the mountain road, upsetting the wagon and throwing out Master Fred Robbins. Fred was taken home unconscious and his wounds dressed by Dr. Webber.

By the death of Marcus F. Beebe the town has lost one of its most valued citizens who had served it in various capacities as school committee, assessor and selectman. Upright, conscientious and honest, he had the respect and esteem of all who knew him.

The Fourth was more generally observed by the townspeople than for some years before. A procession of antiques and horribles, displaying much ingenuity, paraded the streets during the forenoon. Races occupied the afternoon, and music on the campus in the evening were the order of exercises. The following prizes were awarded at the races: Foot race, pair of lawn tennis shoes, N. G. Wilson; wheelbarrow race, pocket knife, N. G. Wilson; sack race, napkin ring, E. C. Howard; three-legged race, $1.15, E. E. Clark, Albert Pease; potato race, pair of vases, Harry Clark.

BRIMFIELD.

Three persons were admitted to the First church last Sabbath, one by profession and two by letter. At the vestry in the evening, James M. Dawes, who spent last winter in Italy, gave quite an interesting account of Count Camppello, a descendant from one of the families of the nobility in Italy, who was educated for a priest in the Roman Catholic church, of his leaving the priesthood and commencing mission work in his own country to restore the church to its ancient faith, and his remarkable success in his work.

The Fourth was ushered in with the usual ringing of bells at 4 a. m., display of flags, fire crackers, etc. The Sunday school of the First church had a picnic celebration at the grove of E. C. Marsh, east of and adjoining Sherman's pond. There were several family gatherings, the most notable being that of the Booth families, who to the number of 30 or more spent the day on Steerage Rock mountain, where they were away from the noise, and report a very pleasant time. For athletics the two home nines under their respective leaders, John F. Converse and Dr. R. V. Sawin, had a game of base ball on Wyles lot. At the close of the sixth inning the game was given up, the score standing Converse six, Sawin eighteen. Promptly at one o'clock p. m. the selectmen and treasurer of the town withdrew from the festivities of the day, met at the town hall and devoted the afternoon to auditing accounts, drawing orders and paying bills against the town. In the evening, John F. Converse gave his usual fine display of fireworks on his grounds. Only one accident occurred to mar the festivities of the day, and that was to the young son of Michael Traverse, who in some way not yet clearly explained had a fire cracker explode in his face and eyes, nearly blinding him. The final result is not yet ascertained.

THORNDIKE.

An attempt is being made to reorganize the brass band.

J. J. Smallwood, of Franklin, Va., is the guest of Charles H. Clark.

Master Fred Edwards, of Orange, is spending his vacation here.

Several of our citizens attended the Barnum show at Springfield Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hurd, of Worcester, were in town a few days this week.

Charles Mongan, of Somerville, was the guest of D. J. Riley one day last week.

Ralph Thurston has rented the Packard place, recently vacated by H. B. Fullerton.

J. O. Drinkwater, second hand in the dye house, is soon to move his family here.

William Carroll left here last Saturday for a week's visit at his old home in Southbridge.

Mr. A. Ramsden left for Nashville, Tenn., this week, where he is to take charge of a spinning room.

R. S. Milliken has returned from Old Orchard, Me., where he has been spending a few days with his family.

Granger Clark takes the position of office boy in the Thorndike Co.'s office, Clarence Fullerton having returned to Springfield.

The Fourth was ushered in at an early hour by the usual noise and racket of cannon and tin horns. Soon after noon the village became more quiet, as most of the citizens had gone to Forest Lake or some of the other picnics near by. There were a few private displays of fireworks in the evening. The residences of Capt. Clark and H. T. Bishop were handsomely decorated with flags and Chinese lanterns.

STRUCK BY A TRAIN.

The most serious accident that has happened in this vallage for several years occurred Monday afternoon, when John O'Neil, better known as "Dummy" O'Neil, was struck and run over by the 1.30 freight from Ware. He was walking down the track toward the depot, intending to take the 2.20 train for Forest Lake. The engine and four cars passed over the right limb before the train could be stopped, and he was considerably bruised about the head and shoulders. Drs. Holbrook and Flynn were called and amputated the limb just below the knee. The patient has been removed to the town farm.

MONSON.

There are indications of starting a new tin store in town.

Geo. L. Keeney has moved into his new house on Pease avenue.

The town clerk reports having licensed 209 dogs thus far this year.

Fay, Peck & Co's. straw shop commenced the summer season this week.

The Monson National Bank has declared a semi-annual dividend of 4 per cent.

Freeman Switzer has hired the Butler farm of Dr. Ballard for the ensuing year.

Julius Graves has moved from the Letters House into a house on Central street.

Henry A. King of Troy, N. Y., has been elected a trustee of the Monson academy.

Lena and Mussie Babbitt are quietly spending their vacation at Williamsville, Mass.

D. W. Ellis is painting and repairing the Capt. Newton house, now occupied by C. M. Gage.

P. B. Moore purchased a $640 carriage in Boston last week, which he has shipped to Pomona, Cal.

Sylvenus Darling will occupy the house he recently purchased of D. W. Letters about August 1st.

Thaddeus G. Carew lost a valuable ox last week, and has sold the mate to J. P. Belcher of Stafford, Ct.

The selectmen had their usual monthly meeting last Friday, and transacted the usual amount of business.

George Rice, who graduated at the Monson academy recently, passed a successful examination for Yale college.

Alfred Wallace is somawhat improved, and hopes are entertained that he will fully recover from his protracted illness.

George H. Thompson has his spacious barn completed, and the neighbors had a highly enjoyable time there the 4th.

The California fever seems to be somewhat abated, though it is possible that a few may be induced to venture thitherward.

Edith Severy, teacher in No. 9, was presented by her scholars with an elegant writing desk at the close of the term last week.

D. G. Potter has built a piazza on the southerly side of his house, and otherwise improved the premises and surroundings.

O. W. Taft and wife of Denver, Col., and Mrs. Sageman of New York City, have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Reynolds.

Marcus Keep post, G. A. R., visited Westfield on the Fourth and practiced "Sherman's march to the sea" on a small scale.

Mrs. Mary Butler, aged 64, and the only surviving pensioner of the war of 1812 in town, died Saturday, July 2d, and was buried July 4th.

The chairman of the selectmen has issued the annual warrant directed to the constables to kill or cause to be killed all dogs not duly licensed.

The picnic of the Catholic society at Reynolds' grove on the Fourth was a success in every respect, and everything passed off quietly and pleasantly.

William Lewis is building a granite house corner of State and Pearl streets, which will be a contrast to the wood buildings in that vicinity.

Arthur D. Ellis has returned from his trip to Dakota and the west, and reports himself well satisfied with New England and its surroundings.

The many friends of "Bonnie" Topliff will be pleased to learn that his investments in Pomona, California, are considered worth from $10,000 to $12,000.

The Monsons would like to arrange games with the Brimfields, Ludlows, Bondsvilles, Somervilles, Southbridge, Warrens or any organized club within twenty miles.

The Alberty farm on the East Hill was sold at auction last Tuesday to William King for $501. It is understood, however, that the mortgagee was the real purchaser.

The Peoples' Market is getting settled down to business after being moved a few rods north of G. H. Newton's office. Their Fourth of July trade in ice cream was 55 gallons.

Dr. G. E. Fuller will put in water from his springs and reservoir on South Main street at an early day, and the good housewives will appreciate the saving of labor at the pump handle.

It is rumored that one of the partners in Pomona Equitable Investment bureau is a resident of Monson, and will visit California this fall and winter, to look after his business interests.

D. W. Letters has purchased of C. A. Smith in Webster, Mass., his stock of musical instruments, consisting of pianos, organs and general musical goods, and will make Webster his future home.

Sven Pearson, a Swede about 55 years of age, died Sunday noon in the attic of his boarding house, the cause of his death being attributed to the excessive heat and not drinking enough cold water.

The Monsons and Hampdens had a close game July 4th. After letting the Hampdens get 16 to 1 at the start, the old blood of the Skull and Bones showed up, and the Monsons won, the score standing 21 to 20.

Work on the town farm barn is rapidly progressing under the efficient management of chairman J. H. Carpenter. The roof boards are mostly on, and it is hoped that it will be ready for the slaters before the 10th.

Charles Craik has been secured as teacher in intermediate school No. 8, and his energy and push, combined with his thorough work in whatever he undertakes, can but be a guarantee of his usefulness in this field of labor.

Mrs. O. E. Dean left town rather suddenly one day last week, and her husband was suprised on coming home to dinner that no preparations had been made for him. It is mistrusted that there is "a man in the case."

The travelling temperance lecturer last Sunday must have made some mistake in his reckoning. It is the general custom to have the subject well ventilated the day before election instead of the day before the Fourth of July, hence there was a small audience.

The assessors' books show the total valuation of the town to be $1,483,968, of which $1,1130,318 is real estate and $296,806 personal. Resident bank stock is valued at $66,944, land at $402,408, and buildings at $717,910. There are 904 polls, and the rate per $1000 is $17.60.

The JOURNAL is indebted to the Springfield Union for the handsome cut of Monson academy published last week. The JOURNAL had a cut ordered, which proved entirely unfit for use when it came, and we should have been obliged to do without, had not the Union kindly come to our aid.

Mrs. W. A. Start of Boston, President of the Mass. Womens' Missionary Society, will speak at Central Hall Sunday morning and evening. Morning Subject—"The work of the Mass. Universalist Womens' Missionary Society." Mrs. Start is a very fine speaker, and thoroughly interested in her work. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend these meetings.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Miss Mossman of New York and Senator Hill's daughter are visiting Mrs. J. B. Sibley.

Patrick McMahon was thrown from his carriage near the town hall, Tuesday. It was thought at the time that he was seriously injured, but later reports are that he is comfortable and will be about again in a few days.

The selectmen have ordered the type, to be owned by the town, with which to print the list of voters. This will admit of the type remaining standing, and corrections being made twice a year. Thus the registrars will be able to post a clean list without names being erased and written in with pen.

Eleven of the class of '87 of the Ware high school were present at their first annual class dinner at the Hampshire House Tuesday evening. The following were those present: Misses Laura Wiley, Mamie Holbrook, Anna A. Fenn, H. Mabel Coney, Nellie M. Ruggles, Alvan Hyde, Otis Wiley, Harry Nye, Alfred P. Perkins, Clarence L. Roberts, George W. Dunham.

The local agent of the Central Massachusetts road has this week distributed a beautifully illustrated book entitled "Mountain, Lake and Valley," by the Boston and Lowell road, in which several pages are devoted to sketches of towns on the line of the Central Mass., Ware being among the number. But in another part of the book they give Ware a population of only 4817[4] while to-day it is nearly if not quite 7000. About 2000 off.

Why will men fret and scold and swear about the management of the post office when they well know it will do no good? What matter if one person did in five out of six consecutive days find mail matter in his box belonging to other persons? This might not be evidence that his had gone astray. What matter if a package with a special delivery stamp is held at the office until the owner calls for it? The post master could not know just how important it was that it be delivered at once. What if a person who has a box finds after eight weeks that one letter has remained in the office that time and another four weeks, having been posted on the list, where the owner would never think of looking, instead of putting them in the box? He got them at last. It cannot be helped now if the office was closed twice the past week within ten minutes after the arrival of the mail, the hundreds who were shut out could probably have their mail next morning more conveniently (for the attendants at the office). "The time" for closing had arrived, and the public should remember their timepieces may be slow, and making allowance, be on hand. Finally, don't fret. Have patience. Look for some good thing in the office and in its management, and when found speak of it. Pleasant words may avail to work a reform where harsh ones have not.

THE DAY WE CELEBRATED.

The Glorious Fourth has come and gone, the programme varying but little from that in years past. The parade of antiques and horribles was thought by some to be not quite equal to that of last year, but when it is known that at one of the meetings to make arrangements it was voted that all in the procession should have lager beer, and that Chas. A. Ferigo, who had collected most of the money to pay expenses and had it in his possession, stated that rather than spend it for beer he would pay it back to the subscribers, the reason of the falling off is seen at once. But the show was good. M. L. Lane made a good thing advertising his business by a big load of flour barrels. The first prize, $8, was awarded Frank Smith for the load of 40 young misses representing the states of the Union, with the Goddess of Liberty in the center, a pretty sight. The second prize, $4, was awarded Samuel Weilrath, who represented the "monkey-man" with the crooked tail. The third prize of $4 was awarded Peter Pole, the painter with the canopy top. Much of the success of the parade was due to the hard work of Chief Marshal John Lashua and his aids. It is estimated that there were about 150 in the procession. All the indescribable costumes ever imagined were in the line. The biggest thing of the day was the picnic in Eaton's grove. No expense was spared to make it a success, and it is reported that about $300 was cleared. Dennis Towne had charge of the big gun cast for the occasion at Corser's Ware foundry. In the evening there were fire works all over the town, which if they had been brought together would have made the largest display ever seen in this place.

The weavers in the Harmony mills at Cohoes, N. Y., refused to do the usual semi-annual scrubbing of the floor under their looms last Saturday, and when their request for an advance of 10 per cent in their wages was refused they struck, and now 5400 looms are idle.

An æronaut named Baldwin made an ascension at Quincy, Ill., Monday, and when 5000 feet above the earth jumped from the car with a parachute, and landed safely, but exhausted and pretty thoroughly frightened.

A crank named Bendicht Krebs was taken into custody at Washington last Saturday for threatening to shoot President Cleveland, under the impression that the latter had defrauded him out of a large sum of money.

The village of Clarendon, Pa., was entirely destroyed by incendiary fires Monday night, 300 buildings being burned and 1200 people made shelterless, most of them barely escaping in their night clothes.

Passengers on a Fitchburg horse-car became panic-stricken Monday, because the driver lost control of his horses, and in jumping from the car one was killed and several were seriously injured.

A shocking disaster occurred at Zug, Switzerland, early Wednesday morning, forty houses and two hotels being engulphed in the lake with their sleeping occupants. At least 100 persons perished.

Dr. C. B. Cone, proprietor of the gymnasium in Union block, Springfield, was arrested Tuesday morning on the charge of arson, in setting fire to the apparatus in his room.

Portland, Or., celebrated the Fourth by illuminating the summit of Mt. Hood, 12,720 feet high, with 100 pounds of red fire. The effect was striking.

An explosion of fireworks in a Broadway store at New York last Saturday resulted in the burning of $400,000 worth of property and the loss of two lives.

Peter Barlow, who took part in the American Revolution, died recently in the West Indies, at the age of 130 years.

The state debt of New York is less than $8,000,000. New York has no Hoosac Tunnel.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, July 6th. 1887.

The lastest news of interest in newspaper circles is the sale of the Boston Daily Advertiser to ex-Senator Charles E. Whitin of Whitinsville in Northbridge. The Whitins have a wide reputation as large manufacturers, and the paper is sold under the pledge that it shall be continued as a Republican journal. It will also be a protectionist paper, as might be expected from the business standing of Mr. Whitin. Who his associates are does not yet appear, but it is not to be expected that he has taken the enterprise upon his shoulders alone, nor, indeed, does there yet appear sufficient motive why he has bought it at all. The price paid for the paper was $100,000. This includes the plant and good will. The old stockholders assume all the debts, which are about $160,000. The total loss of the establishment since moving from Court to Washington street in 1883 has been $300,000. The Evening Record goes with the Advertiser. It can be set up as an independent paper, and keep its Associative Press franchise, but it does not yet appear what will be done with it. The present editorial force will remain in charge until the new men get their plans further matured.

Col. E. P. Loring of Fitchburg, the new controller of county accounts, has his office for the present in room 8 in the State house. That is the room of the House judiciary committee, and he will retain it until other quarters can be found. It was expected that he would have the rooms in the Commonwealth building lately occupied by the bureau of labor statistics, but the typographical survey people are there and will remain a while longer. The colonel (or senator, or controller, or whatever you choose,) gave me to-day a new point on the soldiers' exemption law, and I find that the same issue has been raised in the office of the civil service commission. It is that the veterans who expect a situation under the exemption law will yet be obliged to comply with parts of the present law. They will, so it is believed, have to file their applications and certificates of good moral character the same as now, and be put on the certified list of eligibles just as before. The exemption law does not say anything about appointing officers, but leaves them just as they were before. That is, they must select their clerks from the certified lists. An official opinion on this point is expected from the commissioners in a few days, and it will probably sustain the point made above. Col. Loring has selected one of his men from the office of the bureau of statistics of labor, for such a transfer is possible under the civil service law—and the other will be selected under the law also, though he is advised or threatened that it will be policy for him to make this or that appointment. He proposes to do what is for the good of the office, rather than sacrifice it or impair it for any individual, however deserving.

At present there is little doubt that the democracy hereabouts are agreed upon the renomination of John F. Andrew for governor, and that Andrew will contribute liberally to the payment of poll taxes in order to get the Democrats upon the registration list.

I have happened to meet Fred Williams, the counsel for the Beverly Farms people, who was charged by "Essex" in the Herald with working for the election of President Boardman and then with helping to pack the committee on towns. He denies utterly the entire charge, and all who know him have entire confidence in his word. He had nothing to do with Boardman's election, and what he said for the exclusion of certain members from the committee, if it had any effect at all, only resulted in putting on a man who has since said that he took the place prejudiced against division, though he was afterward converted to the side of Beverly Farms by the strength of their case, as he saw it on a visit to the locality. The Farms people have already circulated their petition for division, and the next Legislature will have it to settle. The case certainly has had thorough advertising.

Our economical and patriotic city council celebrated the glorious Fourth by ordering themselves transported in carriages from one place to another at the city's expense. It now comes out, too, in regard to the large amount of wine consumed at Queen Kapiolani's reception, that the queen and princess took nothing, and her suite but very little. So the guzzling was by our own Boston folks who do not often have so royal an opportunity at the city's expense. Such facts as these will have their political effect in the state outside, though it does not shake the grip of the party in power here. Their constituents seem to think that is the proper thing, and the minority are not able to do anything.

The great court house has its corner stone laid to-day, if the program is carried out. A large area of ground is bounded by low stone walls and all through the enclusure rise piles of brick and stone capable of supporting the enormous weight to be placed upon them. The floor area will be immense and it will be a heavy tax on Boston to foot the bill.

Evidently the Meigs elevated railroad people do not intend to wait for the West End company, with its consolidations and its tunnels, to get ahead of it in supplying rapid transit to the people of Boston. It has advertised for proposals for materials and work for eight miles of road from Harvard square in Cambridge to some place in Boston and return.

Boston had a terrible racket on the night before the Fourth. It began by half-past ten and by half-past eleven it was in furious blast. Fires were numerous during the day and the escapes from serious conflagrations were almost miraculous. Such celebrations are not only intolerable nuisances, but they are serious dangers to life and property. I believe this habit of making a prodigious noise, just for noise and nothing else, tends to destroy all reverence for the day. It certainly tends to diminish all patriotic feeling and to make one regard the day with a shudder of horror.

Certain facts here look as if the liquor issue would be uppermost in the coming campaign. Some men are already busy, and the prohibitory plank will not get into the Republican platform again so easily.

The best medical writers claim that the successful remedy for nasal catarrh must be non-irritating, easy of application, and one that will, by its own action, reach all the remote sores and ulcerated surfaces. The history of the efforts to treat catarrh during the past few years obliges us to admit that only one remedy has completely met these conditions, and that is Ely's Cream Balm. This safe and pleasant remedy has mastered catarrh as nothing else has ever done, and both physicians and patients freely concede this fact. The more distressing symptoms quickly yield to it.

PECULIAR

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to and other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One hundred doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad; no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Be sure to get Compensations.

The king can drink the best of wine,
So can I;
And has enough when he would dine,
So have I;
And cannot order rain or shine,
Nor can I
Then where's the difference—let me see—
Betwixt my lord the king, and me!

Do trusty friends surround his throne
Night and day?
Or make his interest their own?
No not they;
Mine love me for myself alone—
Bless'd be they;
And that's one difference which I can see
Betwixt my lord the king, and me.

Do knaves around me lie in wait
To deceive,
Or fawn and flatter when they hate,
And would grieve?
Or cruel pomps oppress my state
By my leave?
No, Heaven be thanked! and here you see
More differences 'twixt king and me.

He has his fools, with jests and quip
When he'd play;
He has his armies and his ships—
Great are they;
But not a child to kiss his lips—
Well-a-day!
And that's a difference sad to see
Betwixt my lord the king, and me.

I wear the cap and he the crown—
What of that?
I sleep on straw and he on down—
What of that?
And he's the king and I'm the clown—
What of that?
If happy I and wretched he,
Perhaps the king would change with me.

—Charles Mackay.

THE SOLDIER'S WIFE.

Of the soldier's valor volumes have been writ, his patriotism has been extolled by poets, and a lustrous immortality invests his name and deeds. Above his bier to-day there is left unsaid no word that gratitude or reverence or love inspires. All honor was his reward; and from the long and dreadful war the soldier came unscratched, the leader of his fellow-patriots, the commander of his country's armies. History has told this story, and will repeat it to all time.

But who shall tell of the soldier's wife, waiting and watching and praying on the hearth-stone? These were years of martyrdom to her. What dreams came to her in her restless slumbers; what a sound of battle there was always in her ears; what sights of death haunted her waking moments; what midnight hours she passed upon her knees in agonized pleadings with the God of battles; ah, these are things we may never know. If tears and prayers could speak, how would they tell the glory of her martyrdom! The soldier's wife complained not. The sacrifice she made was with that patient fortitude found only in the lives of women. But when the soldier came from the war his gentle wife put away his sword with a sense of devout thankfulness, for now had he come to share with her and their little ones that quiet home life for which her wifely nature yearned."

"Nay, not so," said the people; "he has won our cause, he has redeemed our flag, he has saved our country. Our hearts overflow with gratitude—he must be our ruler."

What cared the soldier's wife for these things? To the woman's heart how like empty vanities are the dignities and titles of the world when compared with the holy sweets of home. But a divine will directs all things. The soldier obeyed the voice of his countrymen and he became their ruler—ay, and a second time he served them as their magistrate, so great was their veneration and gratitude, and such was his devotion to his native land. His fame extended over all the earth, every nation did him honor, and when, in search of rest, he went into far countries great kings and princes came out to meet him and do him reverence. Such and so great distinction ne'er before was shown to any man.

At last, after it all—after all these years of war and ceremony—the soldier said to his wife that they would give their declining years to that home life for which she had always hungered. And the wife's heart was glad, and she felt that the sacrifices and the martyrdom of the old years were not in vain. But her happiness was all too brief; a great and crushing grief came to the soldier's wife. A mortal disease fell upon the soldier and struck him down, and held him in its fatal clutch for weary months. The soldier's wife saw her beloved dying day by day, and, struggle as she might, she had not the power to save him. The people made a great outcry. All the sympathy of the world went out toward the dying soldier, and the world prayed that he might be spared, but it availed not.

But when the death-dew came upon the soldier's forehead and the mists of the dark valley gathered about him, he beckoned to his wife and she came to his side and held his hand and bent and kissed his rugged brow. You would not have recognized in that haggard, dying man and white-haired woman the little boy and little girl who played together on the western prairies in those dear distant years when the little boy first told his little sweetheart that he wanted to be a soldier.

The soldier said to his wife, "Hold my hand and let me feel your face close to mine."

And the soldier's wife did as she was bidden, and she felt that her heart was breaking.

The soldier said: "I have heard all my countrymen have said, and it has soothed my dying agonies. I am glad I am a soldier."

Then the soldier's wife said, "Amen," and as she breathed the word, her thoughts went back over all the troublous years—ay, even to the peaceful, homely days when he and she were little sweethearts. And she said "Amen" once again as all the sacred memories of those years came back to her.

"Bend closer, that you may hear me," said the soldier. "My countrymen have said that they would give me a great burial and build a splendid monument over my grave. Let it not be so, unless you are with me there. Let us sleep our last sleep together, side by side."

Oh, what a sweet recompense this was for all the years of heartache and of yearning! And, as the soldier's wife kissed her beloved's eyelids down forever, there came into her widowed heart the peace of a perfect love.—Eugene Field in Chicago News.

Breaches of promise—Little five-year-old's first pantaloons.—Detroit Free Press.

THE RULING PASSION.

A 14-year-old Pittsburgh boy spending his vacation in Columbus, Ohio, promised to write to his father faithful accounts of what he saw on the road and what was of interest to him in Columbus. He did so, and it is easily seen by his letter where his mind is at present:

COLUMBUS, Ohio, July 16, 1886.

DEAR PAPA: I got here safe and sound last evening about dark. It was a splendid trip, and according to promise I will write you all about it. The only thing I regretted in leaving was that I missed seeing the last game of the series between the Alleghenys and the Mets, but we got a telegram last night that the game went all right. What a dandy pitcher that Morris is. Pa, you should go to see some of the games; you don't know what you miss. You might take ma, too, on Thursdays; no charge for ladies that day. I generally sit on the right, where I can see the fellows put out at first. If you had been there the other day and had seen Shomberg's three-baser you'd have gone home wild. Shomberg is the new man—new first base for the Alleghenys. But I forgot that you don't know anything about base ball.

The first place we stopped at was at Rochester, about 28 miles out. I don't think they have a club there, though a boy on the platform told me there was one at Beaver and another at New Brighton, towns near by. I am sorry I could not find just how they stood; they are not in the association anyhow. After a while we got out of the hills, and when we got past Dennison, and from that all the way to Columbus, I never saw such a base ball country. You may not believe me, but there is just one field after another—only most of them were allowed to grow in corn or wheat this year. This is the country where the Sunday school excursions should run to—plenty of room for all the boys to play, and no such thing as allowing only two bags for a three-baser when the balls hit the rocks, as they are at Rock Point, Alliquippa, and those other places.

I suppose before the Columbus club was sold to Pittsburg all these corn fields were diamonds. It certainly looks desolate now, with cattle roaming and nothing but harvest hands trudging along.

I like Columbus, but I don't want to stay here long. Next vacation please send me to Cleveland or some other place where they have a live club. Columbus is the capital of Ohio—the proprietor of the hotel told me that the place was called after Christopher Columbus, who discovered America in 1492. You see I have done as you said—got the history of the place the first thing. The Columbus people are almost as proud of the Allies as we are; guess they must be sorry they sold out. I am going to Newark on an excursion to see the Newarks vs. Zanesvilles this afternoon, and will write you a description and history of that place also, as soon as I get back. Love to ma, Willie, Sadie and Johnny.

Your affectionate Son.

P. S.—Don't let Johnny have my professional dead league to play with. The water in the gutter is terrible on horse hide.

DISINFECTANTS.

A word about disinfectants. There are many kinds—some much easier of application than others, and some whose value is not disputed. For a common, cheap disinfectant, chloride of lime is good, but sulphate of iron, ordinarily known as copperas, is probably better. For those unable to purchase or apply the others, this simple direction may be of service. Put fifty pounds of copperas in a basket or some other porous receptacle, and suspend it in a barrel of water; after it has stood a day or two, use liberally of the liquid thus formed, by pouring it into vaults and drains, and over the ground about your doors, where any filth has been allowed to accumulate. If you cannot use it on so great a scale, dissolve a pound or two in a pail of water as you need it, and use freely from time to time.

These suggestions heeded, the body kept clean by frequent bathings, the food plain and well cooked, all unripe fruit and stale vegetables prohibited from the table, we may almost defy those maladies which, like diphtheria, scarlet fever, dysentery, typhoid fever, consumption and cholera, destroy so many homes and desolate so many hears. We need have no fear that too much care can be taken to have our homes, from cellar to garret, scrupulously clean. Until they are, we must stand responsible for the consequences that will surely follow our carelessness and neglect.—F. H. Rowley, in Good Housekeeping.

A HEARTLESS WOMAN.

The rumseller's wife parades in gaudy fineries bought with the money squandered on rum by selfish men who feed their own base appetites, forgetful of the wants of poorly clad wives and famishing children. Mrs. Martha Bunting, the unfortunate wife of an inebriate, is compelled to earn bread for herself and children by doing odd jobs of sewing. The wife of a New York rumseller, in whose store Mrs. Bunting's husband spent most of his earnings, was recently applied to for work, and gave the poor woman a child's sacque to make, promising to remunerate her with the sum of $2.50. After a week's toil, for the sewing woman is an invalid and cannot work rapidly, the sacque was finished and brought home. The pale-faced woman meekly awaited her promised reward, but was astounded when the rumseller's wife refused payment. On what ground? the reader asks. The rumseller's heartless wife coolly said, in explanation: "Your husband owes mine $2.50 for liquors supplied him, and the making of this sacque cancels the debt."

All this is literally true. It really seems that those who prosper by the sale of rum, and the consequent degradation of their customers, are not only unprincipled, but heartless.

IT REFRESHED HIM.—The late Henry Clay Dean came to me one day in great mental distress. He said he had been reading the daily papers and found a dreadful record of crime; here a murder, there an arson, here incest, adultery, theft, betrayal of trust, infanticide, ingratitude of children, bareness of every kind from son to father, from man to the beasts of burden he used, defaulters, and the world seemed given away to wickedness. Then he said: "I thought of hell and felt refreshed."

HOW TO MAKE A GOOD WIFE.

Be attentive and courteous to her.

Respectfully listen to her opinions, giving them such consideration as they deserve.

Show your affection by quietly allotting her the most comfortable seat at the fireside, and daintiest tidbit at the table.

Make her home as comfortable as your means will allow.

Be mindful of her if she has a particularly hard day's labor.

Never allow her to bring pails of water, bring hods of coal, or build the furnace fires. You can do it with far less loss of nervous power than she. The mother of your children needs all her vital energy in accomplishing those duties which she alone can perform.

Give her such means, for her own and children's wardrobe, as you can reasonably afford.

Give her means to repair the wear and tear of the household effects. Woman is naturally ambitious and tasteful; her good sense makes her economical; she will make the most of her means.

Be cheerful when you enter your home.

Don't be afraid to praise the neat room and bright fire. Don't be afraid of losing if you praise her cooking. Don't be afraid to praise her mending and her skill in fashioning and making. Don't fail to give her words of appreciation, whenever you can conscientiously approve. Never deceive her. Be ever true to her. Let your conduct be such that she will be happy in teaching your children to honor you.

Do not sit silent all the evening absorbed in your book or newspaper.

Give your family some of your attention; tell them amusing things that have brightened your day's labor.

Speak kindly to your children.

Play or talk with them a few moments after supper. Interest yourself in your wife's employment; encourage her when she is down hearted; be glad with her when she is happy.

Let her know by words and actions that she is appreciated, and you made happier that she walks by your side. Don't wait to tell the world upon marble that which will be too grateful to her loving heart to hear from your lips. Share with her your good fortune as unselfishly as you do your ill.

Let her walk by your side, your honored companion; your strong hand helping her over the rough places, and sustaining her when wearied, lest she faint by the way.—Gospel Banner.

THE EMPTY TIN CAN.

At last it has a mission, and a profitable one at that. Emptied of its contents of peaches or tomatoes, discarded and thrown out at the kitchen gate, it may soon be sent in at the front door or find an honored place in the best room in the house. Thousands of these cans are gathered in Philadelphia every week and made into shining sheets, and used to decorate or cover traveling trunks, and thus get a promotion from the back yard to the boudoir. On the outskirts of the city, within a short time, a number of factories for the conversion of these old buffeted and battered cans and other tin refuse from the ash heaps have sprung up, and the business is a growing one. One of considerable size is in Moyamensing avenue, below Mifflin street, where a large force of men is kept busy day in and day out. The cans are collected in various ways, but principally from the city ash-heaps and the hotels and large boarding-houses. At the factoay the soldered seams are subjected to an intense heat in such a way that the solder is allowed to run into a receptacle, and is carefully saved and sold, the profit from this source alone almost paying for the expense of the gathering and handling of the cans. The tops and bottoms of the cans are melted and turned into window-sash weights. The labels on the tin plates are easily taken off after they have been thoroughly soaked in water, and the plates themselves rolled out flat by machinery. As the insides of the plates are not much discolored by the contents of the can, they present a clean surface, and make excellent covers for trunks, the seams being hidden by the trunk braces, either of wood or sheet iron. Other uses are also made of the tin plates, and there is considerable profit in the business. The process is quite simple, and very little capital is required. One concern in that city rolled out 40,000 of these plates in less than two months.

Do the mothers of this country ever reflect upon the degree of responsibility that rests upon them in the moral training of their daughters? The columns of the daily journals recording the downfall of girls ought to awaken parents to a serious consideration of their duties. The father is not without his share of this responsibility, but is to the mother more particularly that daughter should turn at the most dangerous period of her life for counsel. The relations between mother and daughter are more closely in sympathy with regard to those matters of moment to the female mind than those between father and daughter; or, at least, they should be, and are, where the mother is awake to the full measure of her duty. It is so easy for the mother to possess the entire confidence of her daughter, and, as the sharer of those tender secrets which enter into the lives of young women, to guide and direct her aright.

"You can see how mooch deeference he vhas in dis country," he was saying to a reporter yesterday as he gyrated his arms around in an excited manner: "My naybur he haf a poy. Dot poy gets on der railroad car und falls off und loses a leg. Der railroad folks pay his fadder $2000 damages."

"Well?"

"Vhell, I haf a poy, und he goes on der railroad, and some policemens come along und pull him off, and oop he goes for 30 days. Do you call him some justice and equality!"—Detroit Free Press.

"Grass widow" is a misleading term. Such widows are never green.—Lowell Courier.

"For contemplation he, and valor formed,
For softness she, and sweet attractive grace."

John Milton in his "Paradise Lost" thus distinguishes woman from man. Diseases fall to her lot that do not to man's, peculiar to her soft and more refined nature. A remedy adapted to the cure of her peculiar diseases is found in Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" for women. Thousands who have used it attest its great worth.

THE WASTE OF SIX YEARS REPAIRED IN SIX MONTHS.

About four years ago, to avoid the rigor of our Northern climate, my family and myself wintered in Florida. I went mainly for my wife's benefit, who was in a feeble state of health. Not long after our arrival Mrs. Titus contracted what is know in the South as "chills and fever." Inasmuch as this malady is common there we did not think it very serious. "A little quinine and a sea voyage," the physician said, "will soon make everything all right." We began with quinine and kept on with it all the rest of the winter, but without breaking up the disease. Spring came at last and we concluded to try the second part of the doctor's prescription for malaria—namely, the sea voyage. We therefore returned North by steamer. The voyage ended, but the quinine was continued and the cure seemed further off than ever. Medical treatso far as we could see, had exhausted its resources and done no real or lasting good; and for six years Mrs. Titus suffered from Malarial Intermittent fever in its most distressing forms, with its accompanying depletion of the life forces. She went through the letting-down process—the shocks from quinine and other powerful drugs used tending to weaken the system—until the result was great languor, nervous debility and general exhaustion. Then came the digestive disorders which always attend chronic malaria, until the very food necessary to sustain life actually became an irritating agent—assisting the disease instead of imparting strength to overcome it.

It is no more than simple truth to say that the quinine treatment did at times give temporary relief, but the periods of relief became shorter with longer pauses between, until the use of the drug had to be discontinued. We then tried many remedies continually suggested by kind friends, but the equally numerous failures aroused the fear that we never should find the right one. But, like many other blessings, it was nearer than we dreamed. In the summer of 1886 a friend who had experienced great and happy relief from Kaskine—the new quinine—said to me, "Why don't you try it for Mrs. Titus?" "I will," I replied. I can hardly convey to you in words the pleasure and surprise we felt at the chahge for the better wrought by that efficient and potent medicine. It came as the summer dawn comes, stealing noiselessly upon our sight. The disease was rebuked as from a Power that speaks by authority; the system gave clear signs of the approach of health; the appetite improved; food was more rapidly assimilated, and nature proceeded to rebuild the wasted tissues, and to heal the hurt vitality. A delicate nervous organization righted itself; the fires of fever went out as KASKINE destroyed the germs which fed them; the digestive processes became more active and natural, and all this was accomplished so rapidly that the waste of over six years was virtually repaired in six months.

It was a healing wrought by a wholesome and genuine remedy. The functions and organs of the system all received a new impetus. Brain, stomach, nerves, digestion, assimilation now did their work with an ease and power that was delightful, and in all this there was no shock or reaction. Kaskine is plainly the remedy for the delicate organization of women. It differs from other drugs in this important respect—that while they claim to cure by breaking down the disease, Kaskine cures by rousing to action the recuperative forces of nature and so makes its results real and permanent.

With what alacrity SANDFORD'S GINGER responds to the cry of distress. No cramp or pain has ever made a demand upon it for relief or cure that has not met with instant response.

It is a delicious combination of Imported Ginger, Choice Aromatics, and French Brandy, totally unlike and vastly suderior to all other "gingers," pain cures and nauseating nostrums.

Unripe food, impure water, unhealthy climate—unwholesome food, Malaria, Epidemic and Contagious Diseases, Cholera Morbus, Cramps, Pains, Indigestion, Colds, Chills, Simple Fevers, Exhaustion, Nervousness or Loss of Sleep, that beset the traveler or household at this season, are nothing to those protected by SANFORD'S GINGER.

Tired Mothers.

A little elbow leans upon your knee—
Your tired knee that has so much to bear;
A child's dear eyes are looking lovingly
From underneath a thatch of tangled hair.

Perhaps you do not heed the velvet touch
Of warm, moist fingers holding yours so tight!
You do not prize the blessings overmuch—
You almost are too tired to pray to-night.

But it is blessedness! A year ago
I did not see it as I do to-day—
We are all so dull and thankless, and too slow
To catch the sunshine till it slips away.

And now it seems surpassing strange to me
That while I wore the badge of motherhood
I did not kiss more oft and tenderly
The little child that brought me only good.

And if some night when you sit down to rest,
You miss the elbow from your tired knee;
This restless curly head from off your breast;
This lisping tongue that chatters constantly.

If from your own the dimpled hand had slipped,
And ne'er would nestle in your own again,
If the white feet into the grave had tripped—
I could not blame you for your heartache then.

I wonder so that mothers ever fret
At their little children clinging to their gown;
Or that the footprints, when the days are wet,
Are ever black enough to make them frown.

If I could find a little muddy boot,
Or cap, or jacket, on my chamber floor—
If I could kiss a rosy, restless foot,
And hear it patter in my house once more;

If I could mend a broken cart to-day,
To-morrow make a kite to reach the sky—
There is no woman in God's world could say
She was more blissfully content than I!

But, ah, the dainty pillow next my own
Is never rumpled by a shining head;
My singing birdling from its nest has flown—
The little boy I used to kiss—is dead.

THE ENGINEER'S STORY.

Mayhap, stranger, you hev run over the Pennsylvany Central railroad. As you may say, I was born and brought up on that line, first as fireman, then engineer nigh on to twenty years. It's allers excitin' to run a machine, and when I was a fireman I used to think it was better to be top of one of them splendid engines than to be President of the United States. The day they first put me on the footboard and I took the lever in my hand and knew it was my engine, I reckon I was the proudest man between Pittsburg and Altoona. I kinder thought that everybody was goin' to be out thet day, to see how the train made her run, and you kin bet all your specie that she went slack up to the minit, the whole 117 miles. But this kind of spirit wore off, after a while, 'n I settled down into a a sober stiddy goin man; 'n they did say that I wor as safe 'n reliable a man as they hed in the business. I hev to say it, stranger, as there's nobody else to do it; elsewise you wouldn't know it.

I was turned 23 wen me and Mary was married. Twenty-eight years ago! You hev a wife, stranger? Hevn't got no wife! Well! mayhaps it's just as well! I hed Mary some eight years, but it don't seem like no time, now. I left her there in the old Keystone state, her an' the boy. Sometimes I think I'd like to go back again and see the place where they both lie, but I suppose I never shall. Don't seem as if I had the heart to do it. It wasn't in any churchyard, you know; but a little way up the mountain there was a green quiet spot among the trees, and they are there—not more'n a hundred feet, say, above the track—and I often wonder if Charley doesn't still dream, when the New York express thunders by, that his old father is holding the throttle.

I put up a snug cabin by the side of the road where I had a small clearin', and between whiles I used to plant my potatoes and things, enough to keep us going, and Mary had her garden. Mary allers took to flowers, as I used to tell her jokin' like, 'cos she was one of the family. Then we had a cow, and Mary raised chickens, and I never see no person could do as much with chickens as Mary could. Jest seemed like those hens were allers strainin' of themselves layin' eggs. You never see nothin' pay stricter attention to business than what they did. Never standin' about and foolin' around, but allers at it. An' then they'd set an' hatch incredible. Mostly two broods a year, an' brought 'em all up.

Mary raised the cow. One of the neighbors giv it to her wen it was a calf, and she made much of it. I used to tie it to a stake near the cabin wen it was a little thing, for it to eat grass. Mary didn't know much about things then, she was young like, and one day she thought she'd put the calf in the stable. I told her she'd better not try it—she just a slight girl. Now a calf, you know, is the most deceivin' animal in the world. It don't look as if it hed any strength, and yet it'll upset a full grown man. So Mary unties the rope and starts for the shed, and the calf kicked up his heels and away he went. Mary held on the rope and away she went—thrown down, rolled over—and there was a confusion of calf and calico all over the place. There wasn't no bones broken, but Mary was the most amazed girl you ever saw. That calf grew up to be a knowin' cow. She used to run out on the track just on purpose to frighten people. She'd stay on till the train was close up, but never get hit. The men soon all got to know her and didn't mind her. But whenever a new engineer came along and saw her he'd whistle brakes and raise a rumpus, often bringing the train to a dead stop. But she'd walk off just at the right time and seemed to understand the joke.

Our little cabin was in among the mountains, a good ways from any other house, and I used to sometimes think that Mary must be lonely, with me away so much of the time. You see, I was allers out three nights in the week. I went up in the daytime, passing my house at noon, and down again that night, passing again at midnight. But I was home two or three days in the week and allers Sunday. The place where we lived was a wild region of country, and the storms we used to have up there, so high in the air, was fearful.

I didn't tell you anything about the boy? No! Well do you know I took to him the very first moment. And that's a very cur'ous thing about babies. Now I never fancied 'em much, but I tell you, stranger, it makes all the difference in the world whether it's your baby, or whether it belongs to somebody else. I've seen a great many things in my time, and accordin' to their parents they was the most uncommon babies; but I could never see much of it. I used to laugh a good deal when people made such fools of themselves over their children, but, I know exactly how it is now, for I suppose I was the greatest fool over my Charley as ever lived. Mary named him Charley. That was after me. Seems to me that boy took to a locomotive from the time he was six months old. His mother would sit out in front of the house, with him in her lap, when I was up at noon, and she'd kiss her hand and wave the baby at me. By the time he was three years old he'd got so that I used to take him up to ride with me. There was a water tank near the house, and when I stopped to water he was allers there, and I'd ketch him 'n carry 'im off ten or twenty miles, till I met another train, and some of the boys 'd carry him back home. 'Twasn't long afore there was scarce a man on the road as didn't know Charley Latham's baby. They'd pick 'im up wherever they could find 'im, and sometimes he'd be gone nearly all day, but somebody 'd set 'im down afore night, 'n he'd come toddlin' home. Sometimes I think it's queer how the men used to take to that baby. There was fellers just as rough as bears—brakemen, they'd get drunk and crazy with liquor and cut or shoot a man quicker 'n lightnin'; 'n section men—up in them mountains them section men were mighty hard cases. What for fightin' and quarrelin', they'd beat Sam Hill. An' yit there wasn't one o' them chaps as would speak a cross word to my baby. They was all fond of 'im, and if anybody took to imposin' on 'im, why, there'd be a muss quicker'n the drop of yer hat.

There was Bill Walker. You didn't know Bill Walker, did you? No! Of course you didn't. Dead now. Left a switch open on 'im and he run off. Never spoke after they picked 'im up. Bill, he was a crusty old bachelor—one of them fellers wat never sees nothin', if he can help himself. He didn't have no relations, and he was so sot again everybody the boys used to say they didn't believe he ever had a father or mother like other folks. He'd hard lines in his life, for a fact, and it made 'im wat they call a misen——. Yes! that's it—a misentorp. He seemed to hev a particular grudge for everybody he had seen, and a sort of general disgust for everybody he hadn't. Bill picked up the baby for a ride one day, and when he stopped at the next station he was goin' 'round oilin' his ingine and the tyke taggin' after, holdin' on to his coat tail and getting himself all covered with oil and grease, jest like a reg'lar engineer; and there was one of the station men as didn't like Bill, nohow, and he ses, ses he: "Hullo, Bill! is that a left-hander of your'n?"

They say Bill just turned ashy. He sets down his can and reached for that feller—jest one square in the juggler, and he didn't git out o' bed for ten days. One day there came down from New York a rocking-horse, and Mary found it at the water-tank with a piece of paper tied to the bridle, 'n it said like this: "If Bill Walker could ever wish for a baby of his own it would be little Charley!" That rocking-horse cost Bill a whole month's wages.

One of the first things Charley learned to say, wen he was beginnin' to talk, was this: You see the men on the road used to call one another "Pard"—short for "pardner." Charley he caught it, and he always called me "Pard." I don't think he ever called me father or papa, like other children do; but it was allers "Pard." "You and me is pards, isn't we?" he used to say. An' that's what we allers called one another, and he went by the name of "Charley Latham's pard" all over the road.

I'd be goin' by the house on the noon train, an' leanin' out o' the cab watchin' for 'im, 'n he'd be out in front with a white rag or something to wave at me, and I'd see by the motion of his lips—I couldn't hear from the noise of the cars—that he was sayin', "You and me is pards, isn't we?"

As I was tellin', Sundays I laid off; 'n in the mornin', after breakfast, Mary would fill up a basket with some bread 'n butter 'n meat 'n things, and we three would go off into the mountains and stay all day. We used to do this every Sunday, and so Charley got to callin' it his pard's day. You see, he got a notion that it was the best day in the week, 'cos I was allers home with him. I didn't never go to church much, it was a long ways; and then I thought Charley would get as much religion by going around in the woods and among the mountains, where the trees and leaves were so beautiful and the rocks so grand, as any other way. If they don't tell us that the Creator who made 'em all is powerful and good, too, there ain't no preacher can do it.

You went up to the top of Pike's Peak the other day. I've been there, too, 'n I'd like to know if a chap can go up there, among those awful precipices and gorges, and look over the country for 100 miles and see the mountains around, and the plains 'way off in front that don't seem to have no end, and then look at himself and say whether he does really amount to a row of pins. You see I never was any Christian, and never give Charley no sich trainin', and sometimes I think maybe I didn't do quite right by him. But, Lord love you, stranger, wen he went among the angels, I'm jest certain there wasn't none of 'em had any cleaner soul 'an what he had.

There was a place, about three-quarters of a mile from our place, where we used to go a good deal Sundays, and Mary would read the Bible to us and sing. She was a good singer, Mary was. We used to call the place "Devil's Run." It was a sort of a creek, but didn't have no water in it, 'cept after a hard rain. It came down between two high mountains where it was steep as could be. Wen a storm came up I've known it in half an hour to have six feet of water in it. An' then it would bring down big trunks of trees and great stones, roaring that way you could hear it for miles.

It's got its name because it was such an infernal place. Often I've been woke up at night by a heavy shower, and I'd hear Devil's Run howling as though it would tear everything to pieces. There couldn't be no worse place fixed for the road, if they had hunted the whole country through, than right there. There was a sharp curve, and on the outside of it was a straight-up-and-down precipice for hundreds of feet, so that if a train went off it would be smashed into kindlin' wood and tenpenny nails. Devil's Run went underneath the track, near the point of the curve, through a barrel culvert, and once there came on a hard storm, 'n the trees 'n stone and so on, choked up the culvert, which wasn't large enough, 'n the water dammed and rose, till by 'n by the whole embankment gave way, and twenty feet of the road was rippin' down the mountain. They found out the break before any accident happened, and the culvert was rebuilt, a good deal larger than before. But that place the whole road was afeard of.

As I was a tellin', if it hadn't been such a wicked place Devil's Run was the prettiest one on the whole mountain. The bed of the stream was deep down, 'n full of ferns and grasses that Mary was allers gatherin', and we could set there in the hottest day 'n the sun could never find his way through the trees overhead.

As I was tellin', Charley was born to be an engineer. By the time he got to be six years old he knew the name of nigh all the parts of a machine. He'd learned all the signals that was used on the road. He knew that a red flag or a red light meant danger. That a lantern at night swung backward 'n forward, slowly, across the track would bring a train up, all standin'. All that sort o' thing he'd jest picked up hisself. He knew the sound of every whistle and bell on the road, 'n could tell what ingine they belonged to, and I believe he knew the tread of No. 29 whenever she went by, night or day. No. 29, that was my ingine, I run her about three years, and there wasn't nothin' in God's world I couldn't git out of her wen she was in a good humor. We sort o' understood one another, and she hardly ever went back on me. Once in a while she did, and then she was a perfect cuss.

Yes! he was seven that winter. Just seven years old a few days before Christmas. After Charley got a year or two old I allers made much of Christmas. Mostly I contrived to lay off that day so as to be home with my little pard. Some of the boys was always ready 'n willin' to take my run that day—them as didn't hev no wives or children. They'd come and say: "Now, Latham, there's your little pard, he'll be a wantin' of you to-morrow, which is Christmas. So I'll jest take your run down. An' this 'ere basket, why, the boys, you know, they ses, we ain't got no chick nor child, and we'll send this along to Latham's little Charley."

The first time they did that I was took back that way I stood and gaped, a lookin' around like a natural, and couldn't say a word. And the things they used to send Charley was astonishin', toys and so on. Why, one Christmas they sent him a real silver mug. Oh! stranger, them days was such times as I've never hed since. There wasn't no other children around for Charley to play with, but me 'n his mother is all he seemed to care for, 'n we'd carry on together all day just as if none of us was more 'n seven years old.

Charley hed a little room by hisself, where he slept, which had a window that looked down the track. I gave him a railroad lantern, which he trimmed and filled hisself after I showed him how, 'n wen it was my night down he'd light his lantern 'n put it in the window at the head of his bed. I could see it a long way before I got to the house, 'n you don't know, stranger, what comfort it was wen I was comin' down to see that light and know that my little boy was lyin' there fast asleep and dreamin' that the roar of the train was the footsteps of his old pard flying at forty miles an hour.

It was my run down Thanksgiving eve. I was goin' to stop off in the mornin', and Bill Walker was to take my train goin' back. We started from Altoona late in the evening and a good deal behind. It had been a bad day. The weather had been warm for some time back, and it began to rain in the mornin', and had rained all day. By night the wind chopped around to the north 'n began to turn cold, so that wen we started it was rainin', and sleetin', with an outlook for a heavy storm. A darker night I never saw, 'n wen the conductor pulled the bell I ses to my fireman, "Crazy, this is goin' to be an ugly run." My fireman was a crazy, harum-scarum sort of a boy, and so they had nick-named him "Crazy Jake." But they soon dropped the Jake 'n left him Crazy, and that's the name he allers went by. So he sez to me, "Boss! I guess your right there." Crazy was one o' them boy's thet's often in desperate tight places, but I never known 'im was afeard o' nothin'. I've never seen 'm show the white feather. I don't believe man or devil could scare 'm, but this night he seemed to be uneasy like.

Sometimes there's something makes you think beforehand that something is goin' to happen—a kind of—of—presentiment! Yes! that's it. Presentimen'. You can't tell exactly how it is, but if there is speerits in accidents or disasters, seems like they was tryin' some way to let folks know in time, and couldn't quite do it. Everything seemed to go wrong with us that night. The passengers was all agrowlin' 'cos we hurried 'em at supper; and when I pulled out my machine she had the very old boy in her. No. 29, as I was tellin' ye, was one of the surest engines on the road, but when she did git into her didos she was more obstreperous 'n a government mule. Ingines is like these sewin' machines or pianners, and them things. They git out o' kilter without no reason, and yer can't tell w'at's the matter with 'em, only they jest won't and that's all there is about it. She wouldn't steam, she fretted and snorted and foamed, and wouldn't do her work no ways at all. Me and Crazy fussed with her, and worked with her, and coaxed and cussed her, but it wasn't no use. We kept runnin' behind all the time instead of makin' up, 'n the conductor swore like a pirate. He was a engineer hisself, and he came out into the cab and for five or ten miles he fussed and worked and coaxed and cussed. I believe that ingine knew just as well that Satan was out loose that night as if she'd been a real human. Ingines is like women—they can't tell you why a thing is so, and can't give no reason for it, but they jest know it is so.

Mebbe we'd made thirty mile or sich matter. The rain and sleet and hail and snow was comin' down fearful. The water was pourin' down the mountain and fillin' the ditches and runnin' much as you saw it last night. The wind was blowin' a tornado, and come tearin' through the passes—gulches they call 'em in this country—in gusts that would strike the locomotive like a big wave striking a ship, and almost throw her over. It was so dark, too, that I couldn't hev seen Crazy on the other side of the cab but for the lantern, and wen he opened the furnace door. But I had to get along all I could. It wouldn't do to slow up, as I was runnin' for a meetin' point.

Just before you get to the curve at Devil's Run there's a short stretch of straight track. Soon as I struck that I began to look for the light in Charley's window, which was the other side of the run. Strainin' my eyes through the dark just at the point of the curve I saw a light swinging backward and forward slowly across the track. You know as I was a tellin' you as everything went crooked that night. Soon as I saw that light I knew what it was in a minit. It came on me with a rush, like. My hair stood on end. I blew brakes. I screams to the fireman, "Crazy! Devil's Run culvert's gone, by the livin' God!" He jumped 'n sot the tender brakes, and slid the wheels in a flash. The brakemen behind didn' answer. They was dozin' in the cars, I reckon. I blew brakes agin with a blast to wake the dead, and threw her over. The drivers ground and groaned under me, but the rails were sleety and slippery, and I was forging ahead to a gulf of 500 feet square down, and 150 human lives behind me. I was tellin' ye as No. 29 that night was dead square agin goin' ahead; but wen I threw her back seems like she knew her biz and how much laid on her doin' of it well. Women, agin, is engines. Crabbed, crooked, cantankerous cusses wen they don't want to, but where its works of mercy calls on 'em and they're right there. No. 29 took hold on that reverse with a grit I never seen in no engine afore. She put all there was in her into every turn, and the whole affair took less time than I'm tellin' of it till the danger was by.

When we stopped within twenty feet of the light, which was swingin' still, backward and forward, slowly across the track, I sez to Crazy, "Who's got that lantern?" Knew it couldn't be the trackman, for we'd just met him three miles below, and 'cept him there was nobody nearer 'n ten miles at that time of night. So I gits down from the machine and runs up the road. As I comes up I sees a little figure in white. It was still a-swingin' of the light, backwards and forwards, slowly across the track. He was in his nightgown, just as he got out of bed, hadn't no hat, and was barefoot. The sleet had froze in his hair and his nightgown was stiff with ice. I comes up to 'im—well, I was took that way I couldn't speak. An' he kep' swingin' the light backwards and forwards, slowly across the track, and he sez to me, he says, "You and me is pards, isn't we?" I looks at him a minit. His eyes was open and looked queer. He was dead asleep. Crazy ketches me or I'd gone over, which it were my legs seemed weak like. Then I sets down on the rail and Crazy picks up the child, 'n huggin' of 'im up busted right out a cryin', he did.

The conductor and some of the men got out of the cars and come where he was. It was sleetin' still, 'n growin' bitter cold. The boys carried the baby into the baggage car, where there was a stove and took off his night-clothes and wrapped 'im up in blankets and great coats. There was a doctor on the train, and he ses if we kin git 'im back to bed without wakin' of 'im up p'raps it wouldn't hurt 'im; but if he was to wake, what with the wet, 'n the cold 'n the fright, like as not it might kill 'im. So the boys takes 'im up to carry 'im to the house, and I follered along, but I couldn't hev carried a kitten. The doctor he tells 'em to be keerful and not wake 'im, for it was as much as his life was worth. So Crazy takes 'im and two of 'em holds a blanket over 'im to keep the sleet off, 'n one goes ahead with a lantern, and two or three more about with lanterns, so's to light the way. Wen we got to the break it was just as I expected, track, road, culvert, everything gone, clean as if cut out with a knife. The water was pitchin' down the run six feet deep, carryin' big rocks and boulders, that bounced and bumped from side to side and up into the air, clear out of the water. It was awful to look at. How the child got over the gap, which was at least twenty feet wide, I don't know. A tree had come down and lodged crossways, and I suppose he must hev gone over on that. Wen we come to it we was most afraid to try it, for if you slipped off the log it was all day with you. I didn't like to trust the boys, and I ses to Jake, "Crazy, you won't drop the baby, will you?" He points down into the break and ses, "Latham, we'd all been down there, every mother's son of us, but for your little pard. I'd drop my soul first."

Well, we got 'im home safe at last. Mary was asleep when we got to the house, and was scared as bad as me when she heard what was up. We put 'im back in his bed and sure enough he never waked up. Next mornin' they threw a trestle over the break and trains was runnin' agin. But the doctor stayed with us. Jest out of his own head, you know, but he seemed anxious. Seemed as though he took to the child. Don't wonder at that, neither. Most everybody did.

I watched by 'im all that night, and toward day I got out all his old Christmas things and set 'em on to a table near the bed, where he could see them the first thing. But a fever came on 'im, 'n wen he woke up he was out of his head. I speaks to 'im and ses, "How goes it, pard?" But he didn't know me. That was Thanksgiving day, you know, 'n I sat there by him, hopin' every minit as he might come round, so I giv 'im his things as we could hev our holiday jest as we used to do. But he kep' gettin' worse from hour to hour.

He was sick jest a week and wanderin' and wild from first to last. I stayed with 'im all the time, for I hadn't wits enough left to handle a machine, and the boys sent word not to bother myself about business 'n they'd see me through. So between 'em they did my duty, and No. 29 went up and down in her reg'lar runs jest as if I was at the lever. You know I was tellin' about the water-tank near the house. It didn't use to be used much, but that week it seemed as though there wasn't a train either way that didn't get out o' water jest there, and some of 'em would come over to see about the boy. And their wives kept sendin' nice things—and they were poor people, too. You see, somehow it traveled about as fast as what little Pard had done, stoppin' the train that night, 'n he sick a mite of a child. An' it got into the newspapers, and the president of the road came up to see him and all that. But he just went on from day to day, for death struck 'im from the first moment as he stood there in the winter rain.

From his talking while he was delirious we found out pretty much all how it was. I reckon he heard the storm in his sleep and the roarin' of the run and that set 'im to dreamin'. Of course he knew it was my night, 'n I had often told 'im what a bad place it was and what to do if anything happened—never thinking that he'd go to doin' of it hisself. But he gits up in his sleep, takes his lantern and goes out to meet me. I'd be a sittin' there watchin' of 'im by his bed, 'n he'd begin first, jest kind o' mutterin', and I'd hear him say, softly like, as ef he was talkin' to hisself:

"Pard's due at the run in twenty minits. I kin get there in time."

'Pears like it was all goin' through his mind agin and he was doin' over jest what he did that night. We could tell wen he got to the place where the road broke, for he ses, "Kin I git over on that log? Ef I don't my pard 'll be killed."

Then seemed as though he was goin' down to the curve where we found him. An' he'd shiver like, as ef the cold rain was strikin' 'im.

You see we could mostly foller 'im by watchin' 'im and ketchin' what he said. Onct or twict he shook right hard, and his teeth chattered. We thought it was the cold he was feelin' agin as he felt it out there in the night with nothin' on 'im. Then he keeps still a while like he was awaitin' and listenin' for the train, and you'd see 'im hold his breath fearin' he couldn't ketch the sound. Pretty soon he speaks agin, gently like, and ses:

"Kin he see the light in time?"

'N he waits a bit. Next he jumps right up in bed on his knees and screams out at the top of his voice:

"Stop her, Pard! Stop 29!"

Stranger, I've seen frightful things in my time, but I never see anything so awful as that was. Pale and wild, with the fever on 'im, that mere baby was tryin' to make me hear, and the wind howlin' and the train roarin' the way it was. An' we'd try to keep 'im still n' his mother could coax him, and I'd try to quiet him 'n he'd scream agin:

'Culvert's gone! Stop her, Pard!'

An' I'd take him in my arms 'n he'd be all of a quiver. Then it seemed like he heerd me whistle, for he ses:

'All right! he's blowin' brakes.'

An' I puts 'im back in bed and he lays still a minit like he was listnin', and ses:

'He's a reversin' of 29, he is. My pard—pard's safe.'

Then he'd shut his eyes and drop off, and smile in his sleep, like he was satisfied. By-and-by he'd begin and go all over it agin, and so, day after day, allers the same. He seemed to hev it in his mind all the time.

The doctor, you know, him I was tellin' about, well, he stopped off that night and staid with us the whole week and nursed baby like he was his own. 'N wen it was all over I thought it was right 'n I ses to 'im, 'Doctor, can I pay you?' 'No!' ses he, 'Latham, you can't. His life saved mine. 'N besides that, Lathan,' 'n he filled up like, 'besides that, Latham, I've got one jest his age. There ain't nothin' you kin give me but that little curl there on his forehead.' So Mary takes the scissors and cuts it off. He kissed it, 'n put it in his pocket 'n went away.

On the night of the break at Devil's Run, wen I got off the machine to see what was the matter, I pulls out my watch and it was 12 o'clock and three minits. It was exactly a week after that I took out my watch and it was 12 o'clock and three minits. Some of the neighbors had come from around in the mountains, 'n a minister from a village about fifteen miles off. I didn't give no attention to nothin', for I was stunned like and didn't know how it all was. I was settin' in front of the house on a large stone where Charley used to sit and wait for me wen I was comin' by, and I heerd a whistle. An' I see a train. It stopped near where I was. The locomotive was No. 29. The boys hed her dressed in mournin'. Bill Walker was runnin' her and Crazy was firin'. There was three coaches, filled with the boys and their wives and children. They was in their best clothes, 'n when

FRIDAY EVENING, JULY 15, 1887.

ST. LOUIS has made up its mind to have a visit from the president.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND and wife have been visiting their friends in York state this week.

The Toledo Blade is collecting presidential "straws" thus early, and of its 21,000 readers find that 12,010 prefer Blaine, 6684 Sherman and 2237 Lincoln for president.

ENTERPRISING physicians desirous of extending their practice might make a ten-strike by imitating the Australian doctor who advertises to pay half the funeral expenses in cases where he is unsuccessful.

GOV. ROSS of Texas takes the bull by the horns by placing armed guards on all trains in the state liable to be attacked by robbers, and if they have any "sand" train robbery will lose its charms in that state.

THE establishment of the state reservation at Niagara Falls has already accomplished wonders in the improvement of that place, and even the hackmen have been tamed to a point that enables visitors to go there and enjoy themselves without turning all their pockets inside out.

JACOB SHARP, the eminent New York briber, was sentenced yesterday to four years in prison and a fine of $5000. The venerable sinner is in a pitable condition, his health being very poor, but his punishment is fully merited. A stay of proceedings has been granted, so that he will not go to Sing Sing at once.

THE decision of the president not to attend the Grand Army encampment at St. Louis has only intensified the desire of that city for a visit from the chief magistrate, and a delegation, in which every city and county in the state is represented, will leave there to-morrow to ask the president and his wife to be guests of the state during the first week in October.

THE expected revolution in Hawaii has taken place, but for the present the people are satisfied with the dismissal of the ministry and the formation of a new cabinet named by them, leaving King Kalakaua his throne, but pretty well shorn of power. The frightened king conceded every demand of the people and was ready enough to sacrifice any number of officials to save his own bacon.

SPRINGFIELD'S new post office is to be located on the west side of Main street, between Worthington and Fort streets. This is quite a little way up town from the present office, and those who wanted the office moved to another street are not pleased with the selection, but it is a pretty good location, and is not far enough from the business center so that anybody will notice the difference after a little.

RUMORS are in the air of a consolidation of the Fitchburg with the Vanderbilt system of railroads, though the president of the Fitchburg says there is no truth in the report. But railroad consolidations are the order of the day now, and almost anything in that line may be expected. This particular deal would not be looked upon with pleasure by the Boston & Albany, which has always enjoyed close relations with the New York Central.

REV. DR. MCGLYNN has been formally excommunicated from the Catholic church, having paid no attention to his summons to Rome. His rebellion against the pope is so flagrant that the conclusion is inevitable that he could not have been sincere in the performance of his priestly duties before his suspension. He appears to have sold himself bodily to Henry George, but he will find the teaching of his land theories a poor stepping-stone to popularity in this land of homes.

The magnitude of the petroleum business is shown by the statement of the Oil City Derrick that 53,000 wells have been drilled in Pennsylvania and New York since the discovery of petroleum, at a cost of $200,000,000. These wells have produced 310,000,000 barrels of oil, which was sold at the wells for $500,000,000. This represented a profit to the producers of $300,000,000.

The ancient and famous city of Damascus, which was a place of importance 1900 years B. C., is busy with plans for laying railroad lines through the streets. Street cars in a city said to have been founded by Abraham would be a startling novelty. The place has 12,000 inhabitants.

A sad disaster occurred near New York last Sunday, by which 27 persons were drowned. A yacht crowded with German women and children returning from a picnic was capsized off Barren Island, in Canarsie bay, and out of 40 souls on board only 13 were rescued.

James Martin, a Bridgeport drug clerk, had both legs broken Tuesday morning by the explosion of a soda fountain which he was charging. It is feared that amputation will be necessary. The proprietor was prostrated by the shock, but not seriously injured.

A Buffalo citizen gave his son $5 with which to purchase a hat and a pair of shoes, with permission to spend what was left over in fireworks. The patriotic youth returned with a 35-cent pair of shoes, a 15-cent hat and $4.50 worth of fireworks.

Rev. J. E. Hurlbut, for nearly 13 years pastor of the Congregational church at Mittineague, has resigned on account of unpleasantness said to have been occasioned largely by his zealous temperance and political work.

A five-years-old boy of this village who had vainly tried to get his sister's permission to join in her game of croquet, went to his father for a remedy. The father gave him two pieces of candy, saying, "Go give her one of them and I guess she'll let you play." The little fellow got as far as the door, looked at the candy and said, "Well, I don't know; I don't care very much about croquet, and she'd beat me, anyhow. Guess I won't go out." And he didn't.

Next Wednesday the Congregational Sunday school will hold its annual picnic, going to Amherst. They will have the use of the college green and opportunities for visiting the cabinets and museums. The college tower will be accessible, from which a fine view lies open for miles. There will be a chance for games and sports, and it is hoped the young people will turn out in large numbers. The excursion will leave at 8.10 a. m., returning on the boat train. Fare 75 cents for the round trip for adults, 40 cents for children.

THE NEW UNIFORMS DID IT.

The Palmer ball club received their new uniforms last Saturday, and dedicated them in a game with the Monson club on the home grounds. The game was called at 4.30, with the visiting club at the bat. At the end of three innings the score stood 6 to 3 in favor of the Monsons, and it looked as if the Monsons were going to stand by their old reputation and do up the Palmers. But the Palmers braced up in the fourth inning and played great ball, shutting out the Monsons four consecutive innings, and beating them by a score of 12 to 10, with a half inning remaining unplayed. Rooney as pitcher and Sugrue as catcher did some fine work. The Monsons "kicked" twice on close decisions of the umpire, and came near breaking up the game. To-morrow afternoon at 4.30 there will be a game on the park with the Unions of Worcester, and an admission of 15 cents will be charged.

MORE RAIDS.

Deputy Sheriff Healy and Special Officer Merriam made a raid at the Weeks House last Saturday afternoon, and secured half a dozen bottles of different kinds of liquor, kept in a case made for the purpose. The job was done very neatly. Healy sauntered into the office and talked "horse" to the proprietor, who suspected nothing until Merriam walked in with the box under his arm. A call was made on J. J. Moynahan's South Main street place Tuesday, and samples of beer taken which the state assayer at Boston said contained 3.43 per cent of alcohol. The Springfield chemist, however, found only 2.78 per cent in it. Yesterday afternoon samples of beer were taken from Caryl Bros'. bottling works and sent to both chemists. The Springfield analysis showed 2.61, 2.62 and 2.80 per cent. A search was made in the saloon of George Griffin under the Nassowano House, on Walnut street, but no liquors were found.

DEPOT MATTERS.

The depot is repaired and in use once more after the fire, and in many respects it is an improvement over the old arrangement. In the interior the room formerly used for a ticket office is enlarged and used for a baggage room, with an entrance from the east end of the building. The ticket agent has a room built for his use where the telegraph office used to be. It is semi-circular in shape, with no roof, and when the new ticket cases are put in place it will be the most convenient and best lighted office on the line. The telegraph office is given a small room in one corner of the restaurant. The new arrangement gives a much larger and pleasanter waiting room than formerly. The small building at the east end of the main structure has been done away with, and the American express office will be in the corner occupied by the New London Northern baggage room, that not being needed, as one man handles the baggage for both roads. The sheathing on the inside of the platform roof has been painted a light shade, making the platforms much lighter, and the gas pipes are carried outside instead of inside the sheathing, probably to guard against future accidents. The restaurant will be opened next Monday.
